Thompson Builds New-Look Packers

GM ENTERS YEAR TWO

BY MIKE VANDERMAUSE, Green Bay Press-Gazette

After spending seven years out of football, Ted Thompson was anxious to return to the game he loved. In 1992, he got that chance from then Packers general manager Ron Wolf, although the opportunity came with no promises or security.

Thompson remembers vividly his first meeting with Wolf. "When I got up here, Ron gave me a little speech: 'This is a six-month trial. If it doesn't work out, then you leave, we stay, nobody's feelings are hurt, right?' I said, 'Yeah, that's fine.' Fortunately it worked out. Ron was a great teacher."

Thompson served as director of pro personnel in Green Bay and watched Wolf build the perennially downtrodden Packers into a Super Bowl champion. Now, 10 years later and 18 months into his job as Packers GM, Thompson is attempting to follow in Wolf's footsteps and lead the Packers to glory again.

It's a daunting task, considering the Packers are coming off a 4-12 season, their first losing record since 1991, but one Thompson appears to relish.

You won't find the Packers' GM consumed by the crushing weight of his job responsibilities. He doesn't brood over personnel decisions, or get paranoid when his moves are questioned.

Instead, Thompson has displayed the ability to remain steady, consistent and unflappable. He has been described as football-obsessed, detail-oriented and organized. Not only is he confident in his abilities, but by all appearances he enjoys what he does.

"As a player I was that way, I wanted everything to be consistent and steady," said Thompson, who played 10 years as a linebacker for the Houston Oilers. "I don't personally believe worrying does you any good anyway. I think it's a negative."

Thompson is well aware of how many people are counting on him to produce a winner in Green Bay. At the same time, he won't let that become a burden.

"I have an appreciation for the incredibly important position I hold," he said. "Obviously it isn't life and death, but this is very important to a lot of people around the country, so we try to do our job properly and right."

The right way to build a football team, in Thompson's mind, is first and foremost through the draft. As if to emphasize that point, Thompson accumulated numerous extra picks over the past two drafts. No NFL team had more than the Packers' 12 draft choices in 2006.

Thompson supplemented that large rookie class this offseason with the signing of free-agent cornerback Charles Woodson, defensive tackle Ryan Pickett and safety Marquand Manuel, all projected starters.

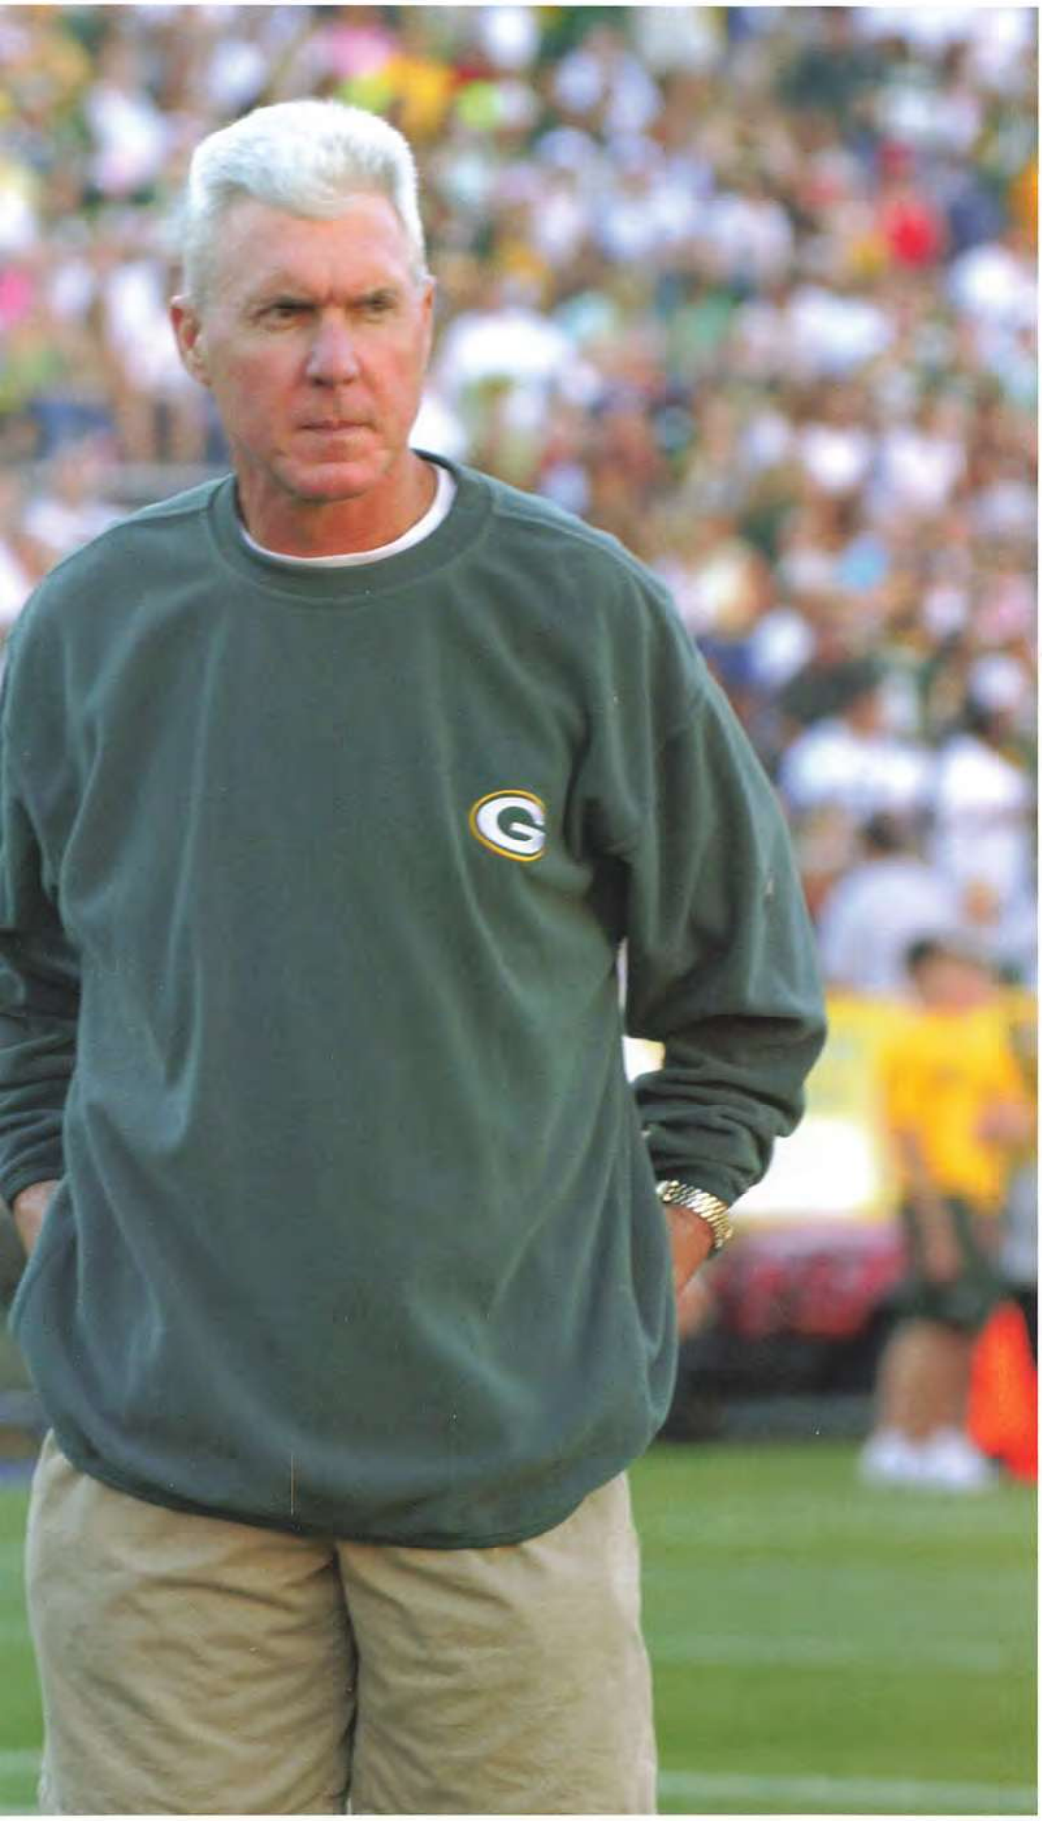
The Packers also made serious efforts to sign free-agent linebacker LaVar Arrington and placekicker Adam Vinatieri. Those moves dispelled the perception that Thompson was reluctant to spend money in free agency.

Still, Thompson doesn't believe free agency is a cure-all.

"I won't name the names, but there are several teams that every year spend a gargantuan amount of money in the offseason," said Thompson. "Come the regular season, there's no appreciable difference in their team."

Thompson wants to see a difference in the Packers' record this season.

"I don't think I did as good a job as I could have done,"



he said of last season. "Our players didn't play as well as they could have."

On the day after the season ended, Thompson showed he wasn't afraid to make a difficult decision when he fired head coach Mike Sherman.

The dismissal came just four months after Thompson gave Sherman a two-year contract extension.

"I felt at the time, based on his record here as a coach and the way he had run the team, I felt he deserved an extension," said Thompson. "There's a part of me that says maybe we shouldn't have done that, but there's also part of me that says I probably did the right thing."

How hard was it to let Sherman go? "I spent a lot of time thinking about that and praying about it and doing everything I could about it," said Thompson. "It was a very difficult time obviously for both of us.

"I just think, at the end of the day, it was time for a change here."

Thompson is convinced new coach Mike McCarthy is the right man for the job.

"It's just his ability to see the big picture and the comfort that exists between the two of us," said Thompson. "This is a different sort of place than all of the NFL. The head coach and general manager have to have a really good rapport. I think Mike's a really good football guy. He understands the job and all the things that go with the job."

The same can be said for the 53-year-old Thompson, who was schooled under Wolf and then received on-the-job training as the Seattle Seahawks' vice president of football operations from 2000-04.

Thompson played a significant role on draft day for the Seahawks, who marched to the Super Bowl last season. Thompson chooses to downplay any part he played in building Seattle into a Super Bowl contender. "I don't know that I should take any undue credit for that," he said.

Thompson grew up in a small town in Texas and seems suited to the slower pace of Green Bay. "I like where you don't have to necessarily schedule your day around traffic patterns," he said. "I like the people here."

The physically fit Thompson works out regularly, and especially relishes long, early-morning bicycle rides through the Wisconsin countryside.

He chooses to live in a relatively modest home. "It's not a million-dollar dwelling, that's for sure," he said. "It's just me. It doesn't make sense for me to live in a big old hog house."

Thompson usually starts work by 6:30 or 7 and enjoys the quiet mornings when hardly anyone else is around. But he doesn't burn the candle on both ends.

"If I go 12 hours I put in a pretty good day," he said. "I'm not a big believer in sleeping at the office."

With Thompson, there is no hidden agenda. "I think what you see is what you get," he said. "I try to be honest. I was raised that way by my parents. I don't do things for an ulterior motive. I'm a pretty straightforward guy."

PITTSBURGH NATIVE McCARTHY HAS FELT CONNECTION TO GREEN BAY SINCE '99

BY MIKE SPOFFORD, Packers.com

The day last January when Mike McCarthy came to Lambeau Field to interview for the Green Bay Packers' head coaching job, the first person to greet him was the team's chief executive officer, Bob Harlan.

That initial encounter was telling, to say the least.

As McCarthy recalls, when he walked in the door, Harlan greeted him with the phrase "Welcome home."

As Harlan recalls, McCarthy slapped him on the back as they shook hands, as though he were "a long-lost friend."

Both actions were obviously within the context of McCarthy's previous tenure with the Packers, as quarterbacks coach in 1999. And there was no way for either McCarthy or Harlan to predict that a few days later general manager Ted Thompson would hire McCarthy as the Packers' 14th Head Coach.

But in hindsight, the comfort level that both men felt, particularly McCarthy, from the moment his interview day began seems like a telltale sign that he was the right fit for the job as soon as he returned to Green Bay.

"Like anything in life, if you do have comfort at the beginning, you're able to take off and run with it," McCarthy said. "Bob gave me that comfort level and gave me reassurance that this was a good fit for me."

COMFORTABLE IN THE COMMUNITY

McCarthy's comfort level here goes beyond his previous one-year stint in Green Bay, his 13 years as an NFL assistant, and his appreciation for the franchise's tradition, though all valuable components to be sure.

McCarthy also connects to the people in the Green Bay and Packer community by being very approachable and down-to-earth.

Whether it's mingling with the crowd at the annual steak fry for the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay athletic department or chatting with hockey fans at the dinner prior to the Frozen Tundra Classic, McCarthy possesses a personality and a demeanor that blends into those around him, even though he has such a high-profile job.

"The down-to-earth thing jumps out at you, because not every coach is like that," Harlan said. "There's a real warmth there and I think he's just comfortable being around the folks."

Harlan specifically recalls McCarthy's first appearance in front of the Packers' board of directors during the spring. He didn't know a soul in the room, but he stuck around after the meeting to get to know several members, breaking down the lack of familiarity and avoiding any awkwardness along the way. It was a gesture the board sincerely appreciated, according to Harlan.

"Some coaches are very good at that, and others … I've been through a lot of coaches in 35 years and some of them aren't good at all," Harlan said. "But he is, and it's genuine, and I think that's a key point, too.

"It's not 'This is the way I think I need to act.' It's the way he acts. It's natural for him. There's nothing phony about it."

BROUGHT UP AROUND PEOPLE

So where and how does a genuine, down-to-earth personality that fits Green Bay so well develop in someone who has lived in the upper Midwest only one of his first 42 years?

In this case, in Pittsburgh, being around hard-working, blue-collar people on an everyday basis.

McCarthy was raised in Greenfield, a neighborhood just a few miles from downtown Pittsburgh. His father was a longtime firefighter and police officer, who also owned a bar, where McCarthy worked odd jobs growing up and interacted often with the clientele, mostly workers from the nearby steel mill who had just completed another grueling shift.

To Harlan, McCarthy's roots bring to mind those of another well-known coach he has worked with, Marquette basketball legend Al McGuire, who had a take on life that partly applies to McCarthy.

"Al always tried to tell me that I had to get two jobs before I settled down in life – you have to work in a bar, and you have to drive a cab in New York," Harlan said. "So I almost wonder if it wasn't the way he was raised, mixing with people and being around people with that background."

In Green Bay, McCarthy may not find steel mills, but he does find the same kind of hard-working, no-nonsense people he's been around his whole life, and that certainly plays into the comfort level he feels here.

"The way I grew up and the way I was raised and the neighborhood I was raised in reminds me a lot of Green Bay, and I've always felt a connection to that," he said. "I felt that in 1999, and I obviously still feel it today.

"I was only here for one year, but the people were very genuine, and it just reminded me of home."

MAKING AN IMPRESSION

That connection helped give McCarthy the confidence to make a memorable impression during his interview with Thompson.

So did his previous run at a head-coaching job, five years ago in Cleveland. At that time, McCarthy had been an offensive coordinator only one year in New Orleans.

But after getting turned down by the Browns, he put in four more years as offensive coordinator for the Saints and one with San Francisco, preparing him that much more to handle Thompson's interview and take the next step.

"Coming into Green Bay, I had experienced everything I was asked in Cleveland," McCarthy said. "There is a lot of carryover between being a coordinator and being a head coach. I didn't think there was a question he couldn't ask that I didn't have a confident, experienced answer for. I could relate to it with substance."

He also showed he could relate to Thompson, who said as much after hiring him.

"What stood out to me in the interview process was Mike's leadership ability and the comfort level that he and I had on a personal level," Thompson said. "Mike is a tough, no-nonsense person, and that appealed to me very much."

McCarthy needed to make that indelible an impression on Thompson because he beat out a list of quality candidates that included two other offensive coordinators (the Browns' Maurice Carthon and the Cowboys' Sean Payton) and four defensive coordinators (the Giants' Tim Lewis, the Bears' Ron Rivera, the Chargers' Wade Phillips and the Packers' Jim Bates).

In addition, Thompson had saved Bates, whom some had considered the favorite to get the job, for his last interview. And by most accounts, Bates was impressive in his own right.

But when Thompson evaluated all the candidates, it may have been McCarthy's personality and ability to connect with people that tipped the balance.

"I remember Ted telling me, 'I know I can work with him,'" Harlan said. "He was the one he was comfortable with.

"That showed the way Mike impressed him because he could have been swayed very easily, and you do have a tendency to go with what you hear last. But he didn't do that."

THE RIGHT JOB

Landing a head-coaching job after 13 years as an NFL assistant, including six calling plays as an offensive coordinator, was undoubtedly the next step for McCarthy.

And when everything about his background, personality and approach are taken into account, he seems to have found not just a head-coaching job, but the job that fits him best.

"You're always looking for that right job, but really you don't have any control over it," McCarthy said. "When they offer you the one that isn't necessarily right, what are you going to do? Turn it down? You're not going to say no.

"That's why I feel so blessed to coach at the right place."

McCarthy had this in mind as a career destination when he got a taste of Green Bay in 1999, and he's never hesitated to express what the franchise's history and tradition mean to him.

Back to that initial meeting the day of his interview, McCarthy and Harlan took a stroll around the stadium, including a walk down the players' and coaches' tunnel to the field.

"When we stood on the edge of the field, I remember him saying, 'There's no tradition like this,'" Harlan said.

"Ron Wolf used to always say if you bring in a free agent and he walks down that tunnel to that field and doesn't get goose bumps, you don't want him. He's got to feel it. And Mike said, 'I totally understand that.'"

McCarthy certainly was feeling it, and still is.

"I think this organization stands alone, at the forefront of professional sports as far as what it has to offer and the environment it creates for you to be successful," he said.

"It's special."

The right fit, indeed.

BY ED BOUCHETTE, Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

It's a long way from collecting tolls at Exit 5 on the Pennsylvania Turnpike to a job Vince Lombardi made famous, from tending bar in Pittsburgh, Pa., to tending to the Green Bay Packers.

That's a road taken by Mike McCarthy, whose dream of coaching high school football in Western Pennsylvania never happened. His journey took a different fork and landed him as the 14th head coach of the storied Packers this year. At age 42, he is the third-youngest coach in the NFL.

The former high school linebacker and tight end who was first paid to work as the University of Pittsburgh quarterbacks coach was never a head coach at any level until now. He paid his dues, though, with 13 seasons in the NFL and another six in college, starting as a graduate assistant.

He also has that Pittsburgh pedigree that carries caché when it comes to coaching in the NFL. McCarthy joins other natives of the Pittsburgh area in the head coaching fraternity that include Bill Cowher of the Steelers, Marty Schottenheimer of the Chargers and Marvin Lewis of the Bengals, and most recently Jim Haslett, formerly of the Saints, and Dave Wannstedt, formerly of the Dolphins and Bears. All grew up within a 15-minute drive of the city of Pittsburgh.

"I think those guys definitely paved the path," Mike said. "Not only football coaches, you look at how many guys are in personnel. You can't go to a football event without running into a scout or assistant coach from Western P-A."

McCarthy grew up in a Pittsburgh neighborhood known as lower Greenfield, where his dad owned Joe McCarthy's Bar & Grill and one of Mike's jobs was to smash the empty whisky bottles.

"It was a smelly job," said his mom, Ellen.

Mike tended bar too, but he actually witnessed more excitement working the graveyard shift, collecting tolls during a summer stint on the Pennsylvania Turnpike after he landed as a GA at Pitt.

"It's kind of funny, I don't think anybody's ever hung out at a toll booth at two in the morning," McCarthy said, "but it's kind of amazing what you see at two in the morning. Especially after the bars close."

That was the summer of '89.

"It was a good experience," McCarthy said. "Every once in a while you'd run into someone you knew and had just a few minutes to try to explain why you're sitting in a toll booth taking tolls."

McCarthy coached the quarterbacks at Pitt under Paul Hackett and helped hone Alex Van Pelt under the West Coast offense that wiped out Dan Marino's school passing records. He joined the Kansas City Chiefs' staff in 1993, where he worked with Joe Montana, and moved to Green Bay, where he coached Favre in 1999. He was Haslett's offensive coordinator in New Orleans for five years before he became the 49ers' coordinator in 2005.

Back in the Pittsburgh neighborhood of Greenfield, where Terrible Towels swirl as often as the Iron City beer, the Packers have a new pocket of fans. It's one thing for your team, the Steelers, to win a Super Bowl; quite another for your son to become the Green Bay Packers head coach.

"We've been Steelers fans from day one, but we never expected them to get this far," said Joe McCarthy, a retired Pittsburgh firefighter.

He did expect son Mike, though, to get as far as he did.

"It was very gratifying to see him become a head coach, he was shooting for that from the very beginning," said Pop McCarthy, who proudly noted that all three of his daughters and both sons graduated from college.

The NFL landscape has been packed with head coaches and assistants through the years from Pittsburgh. There's a reason for that, said one of the most successful, Cowher.

"You have respect for the game," Cowher said. "A lot of us understood the work ethic, the commitment and how to deal with people. You learn that at a very early age and that's led to a lot of success, I think, from the foundation that a lot of coaches from Western Pennsylvania have."

It's the kind of foundation that a man who holds down a full-time job as a firefighter and runs his own bar in his spare time might instill in his five kids. It's the kind of work ethic that's not limited to Pittsburgh.

"Well, we were up there in Green Bay in 1999 for a year," Joe McCarthy said of his son's earlier job with the Packers. "I think it's a great place up there. It's not a big-time city, similar to here, although we have a few more people in Pittsburgh. But it's very similar. Good, working people."

That would include the new head coach of the Green Bay Packers.

Five years ago, Mike McCarthy started making the list.

McCarthy, then the offensive coordinator for the New Orleans Saints, interviewed for the Cleveland Browns head coaching opening. When he did that, he started making a list of the coaches he would want to bring with him.

"I would update the list almost every year," McCarthy said. "Sometimes I felt stupid doing it because it was a long time before I interviewed for another head coaching job."

When the Green Bay Packers came calling in January, McCarthy was glad he had that list. Shortly after he interviewed with the Packers and even before he was offered the job, McCarthy started calling assistants to see if they would be interested in coming with him to Green Bay.

The first name on that list was Jeff Jagodzinski. McCarthy and Jagodzinski had worked together on the Packers' staff in 1999 and the two coaches had stayed in touch over the years. Jagodzinski had coached the tight ends for the Packers from 1999-2003 before leaving for the same job with the Atlanta Falcons. After one season in Atlanta, Jagodzinski was promoted to offensive line coach. As soon as Jagodzinski spoke to McCarthy, he knew his next promotion was imminent.

"He called me right after he interviewed and asked if I was interested in coming back to Green Bay if he got the job," Jagodzinski said. "As soon as I got off the phone with him, I called my parents (in West Allis, Wis.) and told them I was coming home. I knew he was going to get the job. I just had a feeling about it."

Jagodzinski was right. McCarthy was hired days later and the first move he made as head coach was to hire Jagodzinski as his offensive coordinator.

"Obviously we knew each other well, and I had been following his career in Atlanta," McCarthy said. "I knew he'd be a perfect fit."

There were a few other coaches whom McCarthy had worked with who he wanted to bring with him to Green Bay as well. Winston Moss had been the linebackers coach with the Saints when McCarthy was there and McCarthy felt so strongly about adding Moss to his staff that he hired him even before he hired a defensive coordinator.

"I knew I could work well with Winston and I knew he would fit in well with whoever I hired as defensive coordinator," McCarthy said. "In this business, you can't wait to make certain hires because another team will come in and snatch them away. I wasn't going to risk letting that happen with Winston."

With several of his other hires, McCarthy looked to assistants whom he had worked with. Receivers coach Jimmy Robinson, strength and conditioning coordinator Rock Gullickson and offensive quality control coach Ty Knott had worked with McCarthy with the New Orleans Saints.

Special teams coordinator Mike Stock, defensive ends coach Carl Hairston and defensive backs coach Kurt Schottenheimer all worked with McCarthy with the Kansas City Chiefs.

Tight ends coach Ben McAdoo worked with McCarthy with the San Francisco 49ers and in New Orleans.

"I think it's only natural that we're most comfortable with guys who we've coached with before," McCarthy said. "When you've worked with a guy you know about their dedication and work ethic."

McCarthy admitted he was especially excited about adding Stock, who has coached for more than 40 years, to his staff.

"He was one of the guys I was always really impressed with when I coached with him," McCarthy said. "When I got the job, his name was one of the first I thought of to coach special teams."

Without a doubt the toughest hire McCarthy had to make was at defensive coordinator. The Packers were going to have their fourth defensive coordinator in as many seasons and McCarthy brought in several coaches from around the league to interview for the job before realizing that the guy he really wanted had been down the hall from him the whole time.

Bob Sanders had coached under former Packers defensive coordinator Jim Bates with the Miami Dolphins and the Packers. McCarthy realized the benefit to keeping Bates' system in place, especially since it had been so successful during the 2005 season.

"The more I met with Bob, the more comfortable I felt with him," McCarthy said. "He has a great football mind and he was very well-respected by the players who were here. I also didn't want the players to have to learn a different defensive system again."

Sanders said he had met McCarthy once before he became the head coach and said he just wanted to let McCarthy know of his vision for the defense.

"I was familiar with him. I'd met him at the Sugar Bowl when he was with the Saints and I was coaching at Florida," Sanders said. "I knew he was very well-respected and I definitely wanted to work for him. I think it was just a matter of convincing him that he wanted to work with me."

McCarthy also faced the daunting task of deciding which other members of Mike Sherman's staff to keep and which to let go. During that decision process, McCarthy sought advice from general manager Ted Thompson and others from around the league while deciding which coaches to keep.

One of the coaches who got the strongest recommendation from Thompson and others was assistant offensive line coach Joe Philbin. McCarthy felt similarly and promoted Philbin to offensive line coach.

"I was hearing great things about a lot of the coaches, but a lot of people really made a point to tell me that I really should take a long look at Joe Philbin," McCarthy said. "I was impressed with what I heard from him then and he's done a great job since then."

McCarthy also decided to keep running backs coach Edgar Bennett, defensive tackles coach Robert Nunn, assistant offensive line coach James Campen, and cornerbacks coach Lionel Washington.

"I think it's a tremendous benefit to have guys on the staff who have been here and who know how the Green Bay Packers do things," McCarthy said. "That's why it's great to have a guy like Edgar who has been here both as a player and a coach on staff. There were a lot of great coaches here and I feel I was fortunate to keep as many of them as I did."

McCarthy rounded out his staff by hiring two coaches who clearly have coaching in their lineage. Eric Lewis, whose father Sherman Lewis was the Packers' offensive coordinator from 1992-99, was hired as defensive quality control coach. Shawn Slocum, son of former Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum, was hired as an assistant special teams coach.

McCarthy also brought in Tom Clements as the quarterbacks coach. Clements, a former standout signal-caller himself, is a 13-year coaching veteran and was the offensive coordinator in Buffalo for the past two years.

Jagodzinski said he has been very impressed with the chemistry of the coaching staff, something that can be rare on new staffs.

"We get along incredibly well," Jagodzinski said. "I give Coach McCarthy all the credit for that. He obviously picked a group that he thought could work well together."

McCarthy said he's been thrilled with his coaching staff so far.

"I love this staff, but I better because I picked it," McCarthy said with a laugh. "Five years ago when I started making the list of guys who I would want to hire if I ever got to be a head coach, obviously I didn't know when that would happen.

"Actually getting to hire your own staff is a lot more fun than just making a wish list."

A NEW TRADITION IS BORN

BY ROB DEMOVSKY, Green Bay Press-Gazette

Even if you've never met Rock Gullickson or even seen a picture of him, there's a good chance you could form a mental image of the Green Bay Packers' new strength and conditioning coach.

He looks like, well, a rock.

From his military-style haircut to his chiseled facial features, protruding chest and a head that seems attached to his broad, muscular shoulders without the benefit of a neck, the 50-year-old is everything you'd imagine a guy named Rock would be.

His parents named him after the famous fighter Rocky Marciano, who was the heavyweight champion of the world when Gullickson was born in 1956. So Gullickson had the tough-guy image from the start. It would seem that he was destined to be a strength coach.

He also had everything first-year Packers head coach Mike McCarthy was looking for in a man to be charged with breaking down and building up his players' bodies. The two first worked together on the staff of the New Orleans Saints, where McCarthy was an assistant coach in the early 2000s and Gullickson was gaining national acclaim in his field. In 2000, Gullickson was given the President's Award from his peers in the Professional Strength and Conditioning Society.

"Our players are the organization's most important investment," McCarthy said. "I consider this position as important as any on my staff. I've seen what Rock can do with athletes."

What McCarthy liked best about Gullickson – and ultimately why he hired him – was Gullickson's commitment to using free weights, not machines, to shape players' bodies. McCarthy believes that body fat, not weight, is the best measure of what kind of shape a player is in, and nothing reduces body fat and builds muscle like free weights.

"To me, lifting on a machine is not the same thing as lifting with free weights," McCarthy said.

That meant the Packers had to completely revamp their weight room. Packers CEO Bob Harlan gave McCarthy permission to add whatever equipment Gullickson needed and $200,000 later, the weight room deep inside Lambeau Field was completed to the new coach's specifications.

"They want us to have a low body fat because if you have a low body fat that usually means you're in better shape and are more conditioned," center Scott Wells said after spending more than two months working out under Gullickson's watch. "The tempo of our practices is very quick and they're high-intensity practices. If you're overweight, you'll get exhausted early on. They want practice to be as close to a game as possible and to do that, you've got to get the work done in the weight room first."

Gullickson is a simple, no-nonsense kind of guy, but, like McCarthy, he expects dedication and results.

"He's a good guy, a straightforward guy," fullback Vonta Leach said. "If you go there and work hard, you're not going to have problems. If you don't, you'll have problems. He's very intense."

Leach said there were days this offseason when Gullickson was overseeing the weight room and all of a sudden there was Gullickson grabbing the weights and showing players first-hand how things were done. That immediately got the players' attention, Leach said.

Gullickson's approach isn't for everyone. There are those in pro sports who shy away from the use of free weights because there's a belief that players could be more prone to injuries using such training methods. However, there's no hard evidence to suggest that's true or false.

One of the pluses of using free weights, according to Gullickson and McCarthy, is creating players who are more explosive. And in football, explosiveness is coveted.

"Players want to train like a football player," Gullickson said. "Sure, they want to build muscle and bulk, but more than that, they want to be better players."

Gullickson's program includes many Olympic-style power lifts.

"You don't get big muscles from small weights," running back Samkon Gado said. "I really like his approach. I think it's intense. The NFL programs I've been involved with have been very protective of the players, making sure they don't get hurt and they really don't go too heavy on the weights. Well, he's not conservative on the weights at all. We go heavy, but it's within moderation. I think that's the way to train."

To Wells, it's the same way he worked out in college at Tennessee.

"It's been a good program," Wells said. "It's a strong program. We're also doing a lot more running than we did last year. It's a high-intensity program. It is different, but I prefer it because it's what I'm used to from college."

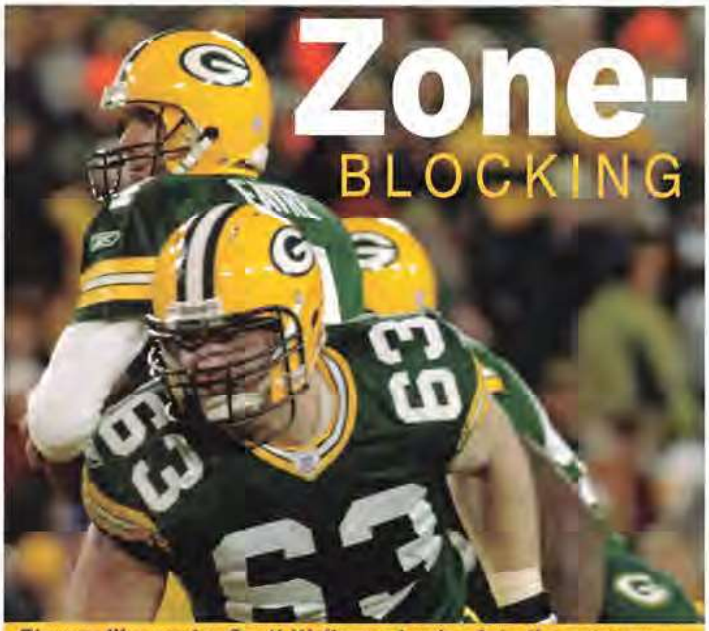
Zone-BLOCKING



Players like center Scott Wells are buying into the new zone-blocking scheme.

▶ BY ROB DEMOVSKY, Green Bay Press-Gazette

Alex Gibbs is the Godfather of the zone-blocking system, and the veteran NFL offensive line coach guards his scheme carefully – so carefully that he doesn't let even his own assistant coaches videotape the drills they use in practice. So the only way to learn and study the system is to work with Gibbs himself, take good notes and put whatever you can in your memory bank.

That's what Jeff Jagodzinski, the Green Bay Packers new offensive coordinator, did during the two years he spent with the Atlanta Falcons (2004 as tight ends coach and 2005 as the offensive line coach). Gibbs, one of the most highly respected offensive coaches in all of football, used his trademark zone-blocking scheme to build some of the greatest offensive lines in NFL history, including the dominant unit that helped lead the Denver Broncos to back-to-back Super Bowl victories in the 1990s, and then took his trade to Atlanta.

The dominance of that system – and the fact that Jagodzinski learned it from Gibbs the last two years – was the reason first-year Packers coach Mike McCarthy tabbed Jagodzinski to be his right-hand man on the offensive staff. McCarthy admired Gibbs' unique blocking system and wanted to build his version of the West Coast offense around it. With McCarthy's background in the passing game and working with quarterbacks and Jagodzinski's experience in building a running game – the Falcons led the NFL in rushing yards in each of his two seasons in Atlanta – McCarthy felt like it was the perfect match.

That's why when it comes to learning the Packers' new offense, the players have been shown game film of the Falcons and New Orleans Saints, where McCarthy used to be an assistant coach.

"When it's a running play, we watch Atlanta," center Scott Wells said. "When it's a pass play, we watch New Orleans."

Most, if not all, NFL teams have some zone-blocking techniques in their playbook. In fact, even last year the Packers had some running plays that used zone blocking. But as running back Samkon Gado said this offseason, "It wasn't like this."

"The zone plays are going to be our bread and butter," Wells said. "In the past, the power runs and the gap plays have been our strength."

Gibbs' system takes zone-blocking to the max. Though Gibbs is long gone from Denver, the Broncos still use his way of run blocking today, and they consistently have one of the NFL's top rushing attacks. The Falcons will continue to use it even though Gibbs' role has been reduced to consultant, and the Packers and Houston Texans – who hired former Broncos offensive coordinator Gary Kubiak as head coach – likely will be the only other teams using Gibbs' scheme. Perhaps that's because so few NFL people truly understand it. Jagodzinski said the first thing Gibbs made him do was agree not to videotape any individual drill so there would be no chance his methods could fall into anyone's lap.

"He's like the Henry Ford of it," Jagodzinski said of Gibbs. "If you were going to build a car, you'd go to Henry Ford and say, 'How do I do this?' That's what I got the chance to do the last two years with him. His circle of guys is so small, (and) he doesn't share it with anybody. So I felt fortunate to learn it."

Here's how the zone-blocking scheme works – or at least how much Jagodzinski was willing to reveal. Offensive linemen patrol a specific area and if there's a defender in their area, they block him. It's different from a man-to-man blocking scheme in that a lineman never pulls out of his position and blocks, which was a key component in the system the Packers used to employ. In essence, there are no specific player-on-player blocking assignments.

Offensive line coach Joe Philbin has described a perfect zone-blocking play as looking like "a chorus line from the back" because "everybody's stepping the same way."

"It's dependant on the group, not an individual," Jagodzinski said. "When you have man-blocking schemes, it depends on five different single blocks. Zone-blocking is dependent on the guy next to you. So you're always working with somebody."

When executed correctly, Gado said it looks like a parting of the sea.

"You don't have to do anything; you just go," Gado said. "You'll see it."

It's been an adjustment for the running backs as well as the offensive linemen.

"It's taken some time to get used to the reads," Gado said. "It's not easy. It's not just one read and make a decision. You have to make two reads, and my eyes are still catching up to that."

Said fullback Vonta Leach: "You've just got to read everything that's in front of you. You read from the outside in or the inside out depending on the play. If the guys are blocking one way, sometimes you've got to come back underneath. It's more of a read-and-attack style than an attack-and-read style. It can be real effective. I don't think you're going to have plays where you lose yards. No negative rushing plays. You're always going to get 2 or 3 yards at worst."

To execute the zone-blocking scheme, Jagodzinski and McCarthy want lean offensive linemen. They don't want the file-cabinet-on-wheels type of linemen. They asked nearly every lineman to shed body fat and get in better shape. Most of Atlanta's offensive linemen last year weighed less than 300 pounds.

"It's all about body fat," Jagodzinski said. "Our guys have gotten their body fat down, and that's been a key to executing this system."

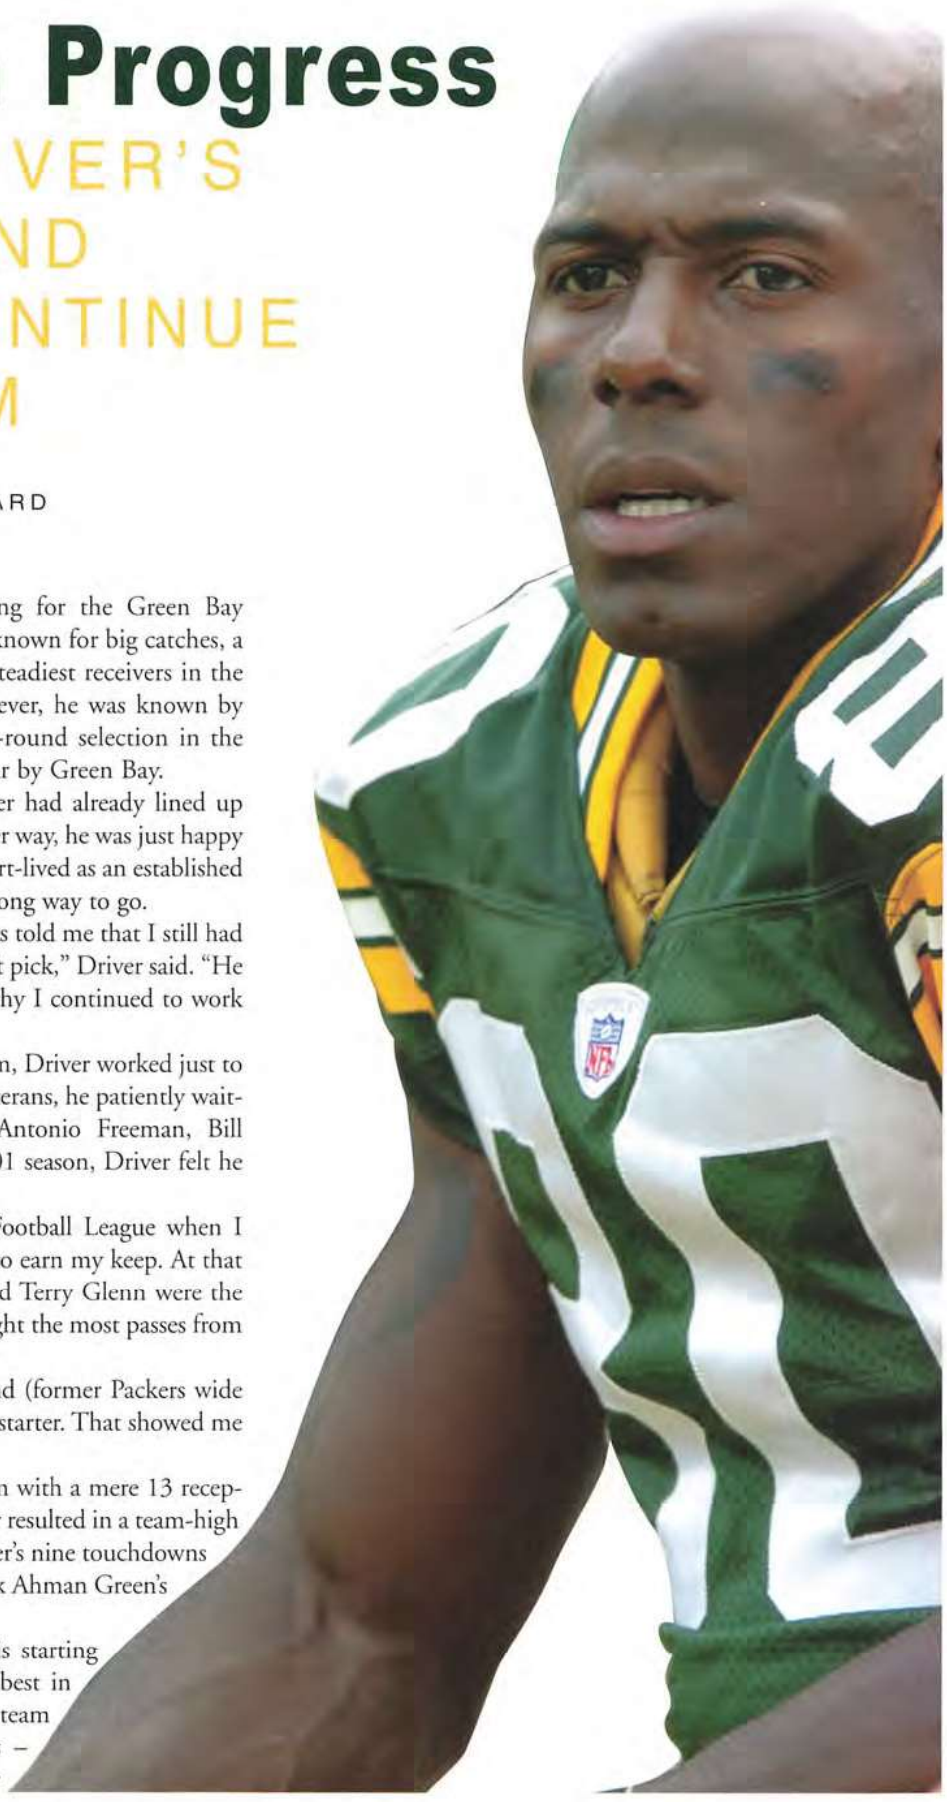
A Work in Progress

DONALD DRIVER'S AMBITION AND PASSION CONTINUE TO FUEL HIM

BY ADAM WOULLARD



Today, in his eighth NFL season playing for the Green Bay Packers, wide receiver Donald Driver is known for big catches, a contagious smile and being one of the steadiest receivers in the history of the franchise. Eight years ago, however, he was known by fans as nothing more than the team's seventh-round selection in the 1999 NFL Draft, picked 213th overall that year by Green Bay.

Before being drafted by the Packers, Driver had already lined up gainful employment at an accounting firm. Either way, he was just happy to have a job. That feeling of satisfaction was short-lived as an established teammate quickly reminded him that he had a long way to go.

"(Former Green Bay receiver) Robert Brooks told me that I still had to make the team, that I wasn't a first-round draft pick," Driver said. "He gave me the edge to work even harder. That's why I continued to work harder to be the best that I could possibly be."

Through his first three seasons with the team, Driver worked just to get on the field. Working behind well-known veterans, he patiently waited to get his time. When Packers' staples Antonio Freeman, Bill Schroeder and Corey Bradford left after the 2001 season, Driver felt he had a chance to finally get his time.

"I knew I had made it in the National Football League when I became a starter in 2002," he said. "I felt I had to earn my keep. At that time, I still wasn't a starter. Robert Ferguson and Terry Glenn were the starters, even though I was the guy who had caught the most passes from Brett.

"I went out there (in my fourth season) and (former Packers wide receivers coach) Ray Sherman told me I was the starter. That showed me that God makes a way out of no way."

In 2001, Driver finished eighth on the team with a mere 13 receptions. In 2002, the decision to make him a starter resulted in a team-high 70 catches for 1,064 yards and nine scores. Driver's nine touchdowns were also best on the team, topping running back Ahman Green's seven.

Since then, Driver has not surrendered his starting position and has put up numbers among the best in franchise history. He currently ranks second in team history with catches in 64 consecutive games – behind only Sterling Sharpe's 103 – and is only the third Packer to exceed 80 catches in consecutive seasons (2004-2005). Driver also is listed seventh on the Packers' all-time receptions list with 329 career grabs (Sharpe is also No. 1 in that category with 595).

A few hundreds catches and thousands of yards later, Driver now looks at the youthful receivers joining the Packers and likes what he sees in terms of their attitudes and approach to the game.

"I see that these young guys coming in are hungry, like I was when I came in," he said. "I was hungry to prove to everyone that I could make it in this league when everyone said I was too small. I think these young guys are saying the same thing: 'I can make it in this league. I can be a good receiver.' We're just hoping that they can make as big a contribution as possible."

While he certainly doesn't see himself as a coach, Driver's leadership and experience may help the younger Packers receivers increase that contribution.

"He just has so much knowledge of the game and he's willing to share that knowledge," said rookie wideout Greg Jennings. "He sees things that we as rookies don't see. It's great to have that kind of instructor on the field."

Receiver Robert Ferguson, Driver's longtime teammate and friend, says its Driver's attitude and consistency that have provided a solid example for others.

"He's not a rah-rah guy," said Ferguson. "He goes out and leads by example. He's going to go to work and do what he needs to every single day. "

Driver points to his stability both on and off the field as the explanation for his success.

"When I signed my first big deal I think a lot of guys thought I was going to change because I have money," he said. "I never changed – same guy, same character, same passion for the game, same passion for friends and family. Now that the Packers gave me a new contract, I'm still not going to change.

"And I think that's where you have to lead by example more than words. People will tell you how to do things, but if they're doing wrong, who are they to tell you how to live? If I can go out there and show people the right way to do it, I think that's the best way. "

As for the future, Driver comes into this season as a 31-year-old receiver, an age when many players are on the downside of their careers, but he believes that he is just hitting the top of his game. He credits Brooks, Bradford, Freeman and Schroeder for showing him what it takes to achieve such longevity.

"They taught me how to stay in great shape and that's why they played so long," said Driver. "Corey is still playing for Detroit. I watched their work ethic. You have a 21-or 22-year-old receiver who can't run with me."

As for the records, while numbers certainly aren't the most important achievement to him, they do hold special significance.

"I remember when I moved into second place for consecutive catches last season," said Driver. "(Former player and current running backs coach) Edgar Bennett came up to me and said, 'You know who was No. 2 before, don't you?' It was Edgar.

"Now I'm going for Sterling's records and I know it might take another four years. It's a goal for me. I just want to be the Packers' leading receiver in yards, catches and maybe touchdowns. I don't know if that will happen. I may not make it to Canton, Ohio, but I'd like to make it into the Packers Hall of Fame."

And when the day comes when Driver is ready to step off the field, he already knows how it will all go down.

"When it's time for me to hang it up, God will let me know," he said. "I just hope it won't be because of a serious injury. I hope it's me walking off Lambeau Field for my last game, waving my hand at that crowd, and saying 'This is it.'"

Whether or not Driver ends up at the top of Packers' receiving records or in the Canton annals is secondary to anyone who has followed his career. To his fans and anyone who has watched him make plays Sunday after Sunday, they will remember him for his determination, character and his No. 80 dashing past yet another defender on his way to another clutch touchdown.

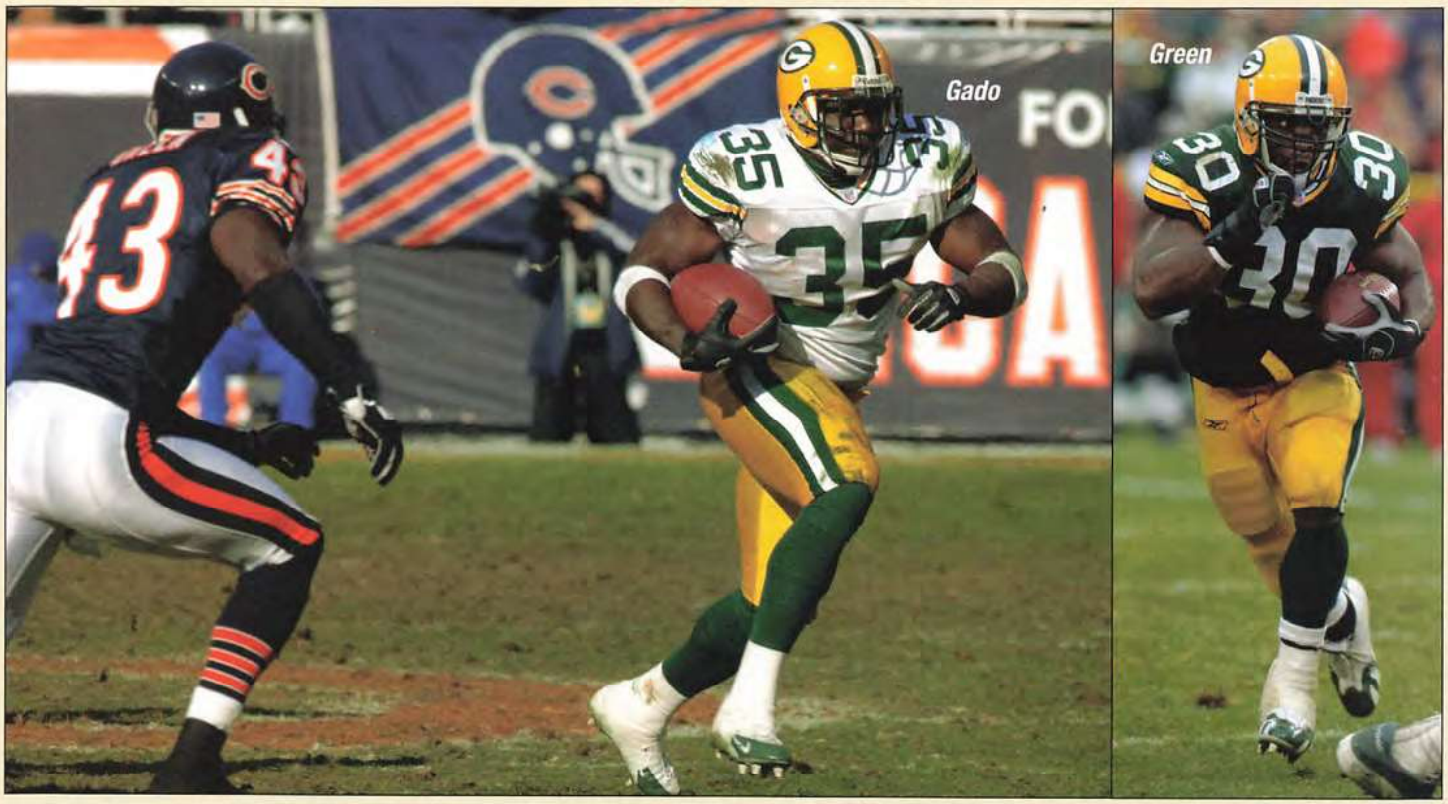
Return to Run
A HIGH PRIORITY

BY TODD McMAHON



There's no guarantee Ahman Green will run at optimum efficiency again, let alone that he will be the second coming of his prolific, Pro Bowl-worthy self of a few years ago.

Yet, the Packers' No. 2 all-time ground gainer apparently holds the key to what will re-ignite the team's previously unstoppable running attack. Check that, Green carries the clue prominently on the front and back of his game-day jersey — in the form of his uniform number, 30.

"If you're running the ball 30 times a game, you go back and look at the success that they've had in this organization when they run the ball that much, take a look at the winning percentage and what it's been. It's off the charts," first-year offensive coordinator Jeff Jagodzinski said.

Jagodzinski wasn't with the Packers the last two seasons after a five-year stint as their tight ends coach. From afar in his post as a tight ends and offensive line coach with Atlanta, however, the Wisconsin native clearly saw that the run game was on the decline.

In a span of only two years, the Packers went from setting a franchise record with 2,558 rushing yards in 2003 to ranking third from the bottom in the 32-team NFL with all of 1,352 rushing yards last season. Small wonder Green Bay was within a defensive stop on fourth-and-26 of playing for a spot in the Super Bowl during its season of ball-carrying dominance and, conversely, finished a Brett Favre-era-worst 4-12 during its season of running woes.

"You have to be able to run the ball and be physical to win games in this league. You have to control the line of scrimmage," Jagodzinski said. "That's something that we're going to put a premium on."

Thirty times over, apparently. Rookie head coach Mike McCarthy and first lieutenant Jagodzinski are spicing up the critical run dimension of the team's longstanding West Coast offense with a zone-blocking scheme that is gradually becoming the system du jour in the league.

Jagodzinski was introduced to the scheme in Atlanta while working with Alex Gibbs, the famed architect of zone blocking from a highly successful tenure in Denver. With a reliance on lighter, nimble linemen to carry out blocking assignments in space, the Falcons parlayed the concept into leading the league in rushing the last two seasons.

"We're not going to have fat guys here," Jagodzinski vowed shortly after returning to his beloved Packers in January.

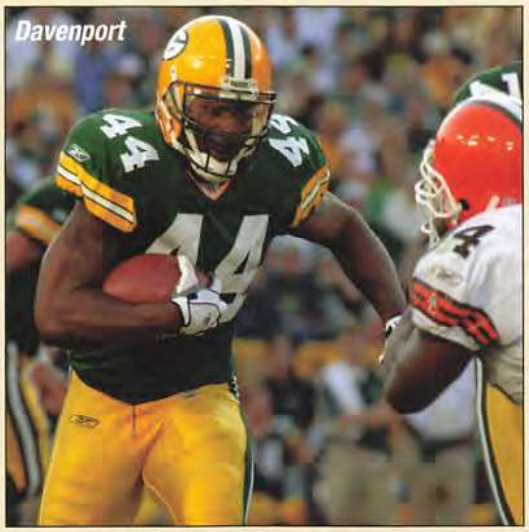
Whether a leaner offensive line is going to translate into fatter statistics for the running backs remains to be seen, however.

McCarthy and Jagodzinski had little time with which to blend two of the team's top three backs into the new scheme, in which it's incumbent on the runner to instantly make one cut and hit the hole. Green and Najeh Davenport sustained serious leg injuries two weeks apart in the first half of last season and were sidelined until training camp this year.



Davenport, the top understudy to Green for four years, was felled by a broken right ankle in the midst of a productive game during the 52-3 rout of New Orleans on Oct. 9 at Lambeau Field.

The Packers then lost Green, a four-time Pro Bowl selection, in their next game. He suffered a torn right quadriceps tendon in the 23-20 loss at Minnesota on Oct. 23.

"We just have to get our guys back. We have to get our guys healthy and get 'em back into the mix," Jagodzinski said.

Even though it's hard to predict whether Green and/or Davenport can be effective coming off their respective season-ending surgeries last fall, the club retained the unrestricted free agents with one-year contracts this year.

Green, in his ninth year in the league, acknowledged that there's a sense of urgency to rekindle the ground dominance that was a recent staple of the Packers.

"In this new offense that Coach McCarthy has brought in, (an effective rushing attack) makes the passing game a lot easier," said Green, who is 1,104 rushing yards behind Jim Taylor's 8,207 for first place in the team record book. "With the run game that we've got, that can be very substantial to the offensive game plan and make defenses prepare for our running game more than our passing game. With all of that clicking just right, it's going to be possibly tough for a defense to prepare for us."

Indeed, history bears out that the Packers are in a much more advantageous position on the scoreboard when they're able to put a greater emphasis on running the football. They've won 55 of 57 games with Favre at quarterback when their rushing attempts equal or exceed their passing plays.

The Packers had nine such games during the record-breaking 2003 season and won eight of them. Last season, they had only three (winning two), thus putting the onus on the passing game to try to make something happen.

Favre had 10 games in 2005 with at least 35 throws, and the Packers went 2-8. Contrast that with his having to make as many passes just three times in 2003, and Green Bay lost all of them.

So, it's no secret that if the Packers are going to prove their abysmal record last season was a fluke, they'll be trying to establish the run game early and often each week. Handing or pitching the ball off to a running back 30 times a game will be the aim because, as Jagodzinski accurately alluded, the Packers are tough to beat with that type of proficiency.

From 2000 to '05, Green Bay went 33-5 during the regular season when it had at least 30 rushing attempts — it was a staggering 31-3 until last season. When the Packers ran the football fewer than 30 times, their record in the same six-year span was 24-34, including 2-10 in those pass-heavy games last season.

"We'll be effective running the ball because you have to run the ball to throw the ball. I really believe that," Jagodzinski said.

The new coordinator is cautiously optimistic Green can be the workhorse that was a sight to behold in 2003. The Packers leaned on the run for 30-plus carries in 10 of the 16 games in the regular season, springing Green to a franchise-record 1,883 yards.

"I remember seeing him run down the sidelines — the guy's a stallion," Jagodzinski said. "He was fun to coach. When I was here, he was one of the hardest workers on the team. That's what's going to enable him to keep on playing."

Should Green or Davenport experience a setback in their comebacks this season, the Packers have another potentially formidable featured back at their disposal.

Samkon Gado, a native of Nigeria, was the feel-good story for a portion of the forgettable 2005 season. The undrafted rookie out of tiny Liberty University and former practice-squad player was the Packers' fifth starting running back at midseason. He went on to lead the team with 582 rushing yards in eight games before suffering a sprained knee that kept him out the last two contests.

Jagodzinski got a sneak peek of the young back he would inherit this year when Gado ran for 103 yards and scored three touchdowns in the Packers' 33-25 upset win at Atlanta on Nov. 13.

"From what I saw of him on the sideline, he's pretty dang good," a smiling Jagodzinski said. "He didn't even start at Liberty, and he comes in starting for the Packers. The kid obviously has some ability."

Just as Gado was thrust unexpectedly into the limelight last season because of Green's and Davenport's injuries, their absences in the off season workouts this year further benefited Gado's development. He had most of the carries with the No. 1 offense in team drills, giving him maximum exposure to the zone-blocking scheme with which he became somewhat familiar at Liberty.

"It's not as easy as it was in college," Gado said. "But, the fact that it's downhill and you're always gaining yards, it's always a plus for a running back. It's good for your stats; it's good for the team."

His own man, his own style

Sanders takes over Packers 'D'

BY ROB REISCHEL, Milwaukee Journal Sentinel/Packer Plus

Bob Sanders has dreamed of an opportunity like this for years now.

When he was playing linebacker at tiny Davidson College, when he was coaching at five different colleges and when he was toiling in virtual anonymity in the NFL, Sanders always hoped to someday run his own defense.

That day is here.

And Sanders - Green Bay's new defensive coordinator - can't wait to prove he was the right choice for the job.

"This has been 30 years preparing and I'm appreciative of the opportunity," the 52-year old Sanders said.

"The guys have responded well and I'm just excited and enthusiastic. You always dream about having an opportunity like this and I hope I can make the most of it."

Sanders was given the opportunity when Jim Bates - Green Bay's coordinator in 2005 - elected not to return. New Packers coach Mike McCarthy then turned to Sanders, a Bates disciple and Green Bay's defensive line coach in 2005.

"He's an outstanding individual and an excellent football coach and that is why he will lead our defense," McCarthy said of Sanders. "I am excited to give him that opportunity."

"(Sanders) is an outstanding individual and an excellent football coach and that is why he will lead our defense."

- Mike McCarthy

Probably not as excited as Sanders was to get the chance, though.

Sanders spent 22 years at the college level, including his final 10 as the assistant defensive coordinator at the University of Florida. But many of his defensive beliefs were learned as he worked with Bates the past five years.

Sanders was Bates' linebackers coach in Miami from 2001-'04, then joined him in Green Bay last year. In each of those seasons, Sanders was part of a defense that ranked in the top 10, including the 2005 Packers, who jumped to seventh from 25th the previous year.

"We've had a lot of success with the defense," Sanders said. "It's a very, very aggressive system. It's simple, but it can be as complex as you need it. We have all the tools we need to take care of the situations that we're confronted with."

Sanders will take over a Packers defense that ranked No. 7 in the NFL last season.

The system Sanders employs will be a spitting image of the one Bates ran.

Sanders will line his defensive ends up wide and ask the tackles to gobble up blockers. The outside linebackers are cross-trained and can play either spot, while the middle linebacker has the opportunity to make a ton of tackles.

The success of the entire unit, though, is probably linked to having two corners that excel in bump-and-run coverage. And the safeties must be sound tacklers first and foremost.

There will be slight alterations to the defense regarding terminology and an occasional scheme. And the additions of linebacker A.J. Hawk and cornerback Charles Woodson will probably allow Sanders to be more aggressive than Bates was.

For the most part, though, Sanders has no desire to fix what isn't broken.

"We do what we do," Sanders said. "There may be some subtle changes.

"Maybe a different alignment or two, maybe a different pressure or two, maybe a different technique or two, maybe a different communication or two. When you add all those things together, there's a difference, but it's probably minor."

That came as good news to Green Bay's players.

Sanders is the Packers' fourth defensive coordinator in as many years - and typically a change there means players must learn an entirely new system. But even though Sanders is in his first year as coordinator, Green Bay will in essence be in year two of this defense.

"I think Bob might be a little more aggressive," safety Mark Roman said. "And he should want us to be more aggressive because it's our second year in the defense. We had some success last year and you always want to build on that. We laid a pretty good foundation."

Added linebacker Roy Manning: "It's the same system so it's pretty much the same philosophy. We've got a few tweaks already from last year. But it worked pretty good for us last year and there ain't no major differences."

While the defense won't change, there are major differences between Sanders and Bates.

Bates raced around the field like the Tasmanian Devil.

He got in players' faces, gave hugs and high-fives and could be heard from neighboring counties.

Sanders, on the other hand, is more soft-spoken and cerebral. And players say some of his best work comes in the meeting rooms.

"He's not quite as intense as coach Bates," Packers defensive tackle Colin Cole said of Sanders. "But that doesn't make him better or worse.

" He's very knowledgeable in what we're doing. He's a little bit more quiet than coach Bates was.

"But at the same time, he doesn't expect anything less from us. He still has a lot of demanding things for us. I have a great feeling about coach Sanders being the defensive coordinator because he has a great grasp of the defense and he's been in this defense for a long time."

Which is why Sanders is filled with confidence heading to the 2006 season.

Sanders watched the Packers' defense grow in many areas last year, like passing defense where they ranked first and sack percentage where they finished eighth. Sanders now wants his unit to improve against the run (23rd) and in forcing turnovers (26th).

All seem possible for a unit that looks much-improved on paper and has a coordinator ready for the opportunity of his life.

"He's ready for this, absolutely," Roman said of Sanders. "He knows everything about this defense. Even last year, when we would go through things or we would install stuff or we would have questions or something, coach Sanders would always jump in there and he knew it all. He's definitely capable of doing it."

Which is what Sanders hopes to prove this season.

READY OR NOT, NFL:
BRETT FAVRE IS HERE

▸ BY CHRIS HAVEL, Green Bay Press-Gazette

Whether the Green Bay Packers' quarterback can lead an inexperienced team with a first-year head coach into the post-season is debatable.

Whether Favre is ready to give it his best shot is indisputable.

If the gray at his temples is a harbinger of old age, the gleam in his eye is a hint that Favre has no plans to surrender to Father Time. Not yet, anyway.

Some days, he is 36 going on 86.

These are the days when getting out of bed means heavy-duty negotiating with whatever body part ails. It could be a disagreeable ankle, an uncooperative hip or a sore shoulder that likes to belly-ache. Some days it may be all three.

On days like these, Favre either wishes he were working on his property near Hattiesburg, Miss., or is grateful to be doing so. Mississippi's heat and humidity, coupled with the sweat of physical work, lubricates the joints and mollifies the pain.

Some days, he is 36 going on 16.

These are the days when Favre wakes up with a desire to recapture past greatness, resurrect the spirit and return the Packers to prominence. On these days, Favre is a wicked combination of defiance and determination. He no longer plays like the NFL's Most Valuable Player week in, week out, and somehow he's scarier for it.

Defenses know he is still capable of making all the throws. They just hope it doesn't happen the week that they play against him.

Favre can't wait to do what he does best: Play quarterback for the Packers. They open the regular season against the defending NFC North champion Chicago Bears on Sept. 10 at Lambeau Field. The Bears' vaunted defense abused Favre last season.

Favre completed 61 of 109 passes for no touchdowns and six interceptions in the Packers' two losses to the Bears. On Dec. 4, Favre was sacked twice and punished often. On Christmas Day, he also was sacked twice and finished with a 44.3 quarterback rating.

"That's a huge challenge for us," he said. "I think the Bears are the real deal. Their defense is damn good. Normally, we have had the upper hand in this series, but the tide has turned a bit lately. I'd like to change that. I feel like I'm ready right now."

Favre is anxious to get past the team's 4-12 disaster of 2005. The injuries, the narrow losses – especially early in the season – and the disappointment caused the quarterback to question his confidence and to explore the prospect of retiring.

In the end, and in his heart, he didn't believe his time was up.

"Ultimately, it came down to the fact that I still wanted to play," he said. "I tried to convince myself every way possible that I didn't want to play. I couldn't do it. Some people said I came back to avenge last season. Some say they could give you 10 million reasons why I came back. Neither one is true. I could have walked away after last season feeling like I had nothing to prove. I'm not coming back to rewrite the final chapter. I'm coming back because I still want to play, and I feel like I can still play at a high level. As for the money, $10 million is a lot of money. I understand that. But I've also made a lot of money. I don't ever want to be the guy that comes back for the money."

So after much deliberation came rejuvenation, and with it a healthy desire to get the season started, beginning with the opener against the Bears.

"I wish it was here," Favre said. "I hate to wait. Line me up and let's play."

Favre wasn't going to return for a 16th NFL season if he couldn't commit totally to what coach Mike McCarthy and his teammates required.

McCarthy needed him in Green Bay for the post-NFL draft mini-camp in May, and for approximately 10 of 14 organized team activities in June. His teammates needed him to be more accessible so they can get to know him as a person.

Favre delivered on both counts.

Favre, who turns 37 in October, still has the physical skills to thrive in the NFL.

He was in Green Bay for a majority of the Packers' OTAs because he needed to learn McCarthy's offensive terminology. He also needed to impart upon teammates the deep commitment he has to being part of a winner.

Favre could be seen doing something during the OTAs that he hadn't done in a long time. He spent a great deal of time chatting with teammates at their locker. He held court one day after a practice with the running backs. Ahman Green, Najeh Davenport, Samkon Gado and Noah Herron seemed to be enjoying the football-based bull session.

"I've always done that," Favre said. "That's nothing really new, except maybe (the media) isn't in there when I'm doing that. But I am making a conscious effort to be a good teammate, and to give of myself, and to see where it takes us."

Favre is beginning to realize that it is easier for the legend to approach his teammates than the other way around. Favre's charm and fun-loving disposition is guaranteed to win teammates over, but only if they get to see that side of him.

That is happening because Favre is taking the lead.

McCarthy, 42, coached the Packers' quarterbacks in 1999.

"I think he's in a lot better place in his life. He's at peace. He's all grown up," McCarthy said. "When I talk to him, we have a lot in common. We both have daughters. We talk about kids. We talk about mowing the grass. It's more than I remember it being."

McCarthy also likes what he sees on the field.

"The guy, I don't think people realize how good of a player he is, when he steps in the huddle. He makes all the throws. I remember when I left here I told people, 'You don't realize how many plays this guy makes outside of the offense.' He still has that. It's amazing. He's done a good job with his body and keeping himself in shape. The guy's a helluva football player. A Hall of Fame football player."

McCarthy and Favre discussed the quarterback's career-high 29 interceptions last season. They did so, according to McCarthy, very briefly.

"He's played 16 years," McCarthy said. "If it were a young guy that would have been a major, major emphasis. That's not the case with him. He wants to be coached. He wants discipline. He wants that. Now he wants to give you a hard time about it, too. But that's fine. That's Brett."

For his part, Favre is ready and rarin' to throw.

He said his will to win, and his right arm, both feel strong as ever.

"It'll be the last thing to go," he said of his arm. "They'll be pushing me onto Lambeau Field in a wheelchair some day and I bet I'll still be able to throw it 50 yards."

Favre intends to spend this season looking forward to the next touchdown pass, the next game and, the next win.

"It's not that I want to redeem myself from last season," he said. "It's that I'm looking ahead to this one. I like what I'm seeing so far from the new coaches and the young players. There aren't any guarantees – as we all found out last year – but I do see a lot of positive things going on here."

One of the most positive is seeing a rejuvenated Brett Favre back under center.

Class of 2006

THOMPSON BOLSTERS TEAM'S CORE WITH 12 PICKS

BY TODD KORTH, Packer Report

Ted Thompson

When he was with the Seattle Seahawks from 2000-04, Ted Thompson used the annual NFL Draft as the primary tool to build a team that advanced to Super Bowl XL last February. The Pittsburgh Steelers, who won the league championship by beating the Seahawks, also have leaned on the draft to build their team from the defense up. Same with the New England Patriots, an organization that has won three Super Bowls since 2001.

Thompson, who rejoined the Packers in 2005 as general manager, has used the draft to select 23 players, including 12 last April. Some already have reached the starting lineup. Others will follow. Thanks to handful of trades in each of the last two drafts to increase their number of selections, the Packers have cultivated their roster, blending in youth with established veterans such as Brett Favre, Ahman Green, William Henderson, Kabeer Gbaja-Biamila, Donald Driver and Bubba Franks.

Green Bay enters the 2006 season with one of the younger teams in the league, but one that is expected to be competitive. If a few of Green Bay's Class of 2006 are capable of making immediate contributions to the team, the Packers will have a better-than-average opportunity to bounce back from a frustrating 4-12 season.

Fifth-overall pick A.J. Hawk was inserted as the starter at weak-side linebacker upon his arrival in Green Bay on April 29. Green Bay also has high expectations for offensive lineman Daryn Colledge and wide-receiver Greg Jennings, both selected in the second-round, and offensive lineman Jason Spitz, a third-round selection. All three of those players are likely to see considerable playing time this season at positions that needed reinforcement due to injuries and free agency.

A.J. Hawk, fifth-overall draft pick, receiving his jersey from Thompson

The Packers entered the draft with little or no depth in areas such as linebacker, wide receiver, defensive back and offensive line. Thompson helped fill those voids by trading away wide receiver Javon Walker on Day 1 of the draft for a second-round pick, which Thompson parlayed into four additional selections. The Packers started the draft with seven picks and finished with 12 thanks to three more trades after they dealt Walker to the Denver Broncos.

While Green Bay was relatively quiet in free agency this offseason, Thompson and company were very busy wheeling and dealing during the draft - a key to success in the NFL.

"In the present-day system of unrestricted free agency, (the draft) is extremely important because these are your core players and some will play a particular role, and then move on after four or five years with the team," Thompson said. "Some will be the kind of core players that you retain over the long term, and you want as many of those as you can, but it's extremely important that these guys can play and perform, and they're not awed by the whole NFL experience."

Hawk, Colledge and Jennings were like ducks to water during the team's minicamps and organized team activities. The Packers also may get some immediate backup help from other draft picks, including linebacker Abdul Hodge, cornerback Will Blackmon, and wide receiver/return specialist Cory Rodgers.

"From our standpoint, the draft is the most affordable form of labor, or however you want to look at it, from a financial standpoint," said Packers coach Mike McCarthy. "You create a competitive environment, which you always want to have. The more picks you have, the more opportunities you have to bring the type of people you want in your organization. I'm a big believer in the more picks you have the better off you are."

As it turned out, the Packers finished the draft with six players on offense and six on defense. Hodge was selected in the third round, and Blackmon and Rodgers were taken in the fourth. The Packers then selected quarterback Ingle Martin and tackle Tony Moll in the fifth round, defensive tackle Johnny Jolly and safety Tyrone Culver in the sixth round, and defensive end Dave Tollefson in the seventh round.

When all was said and done, the Packers had their biggest draft class since 2000 and Thompson's biggest class during his career as a GM with both Seattle and Green Bay.

"We didn't do that by plan, it just worked out that way," Thompson said. "It did kind of balance itself out in terms of being able to draft someone at just about every position. That wasn't a plan either, but we wanted to add some offensive linemen, some receivers, and a couple of defensive backs and linebackers and defensive linemen, a quarterback. I think it went about as well as it could go. Now, you have to get lucky, and you want these guys to stay healthy and perform above expectations, but we felt pretty positive about it. We felt our team is better today than it was prior to the draft."

Thompson said he was set on selecting Hawk at least three weeks in advance of the draft, but kept an eye on the Ohio State standout for the last three seasons while he scouted the Buckeyes in Columbus.

"I always took a glance at him when I was at practice and stuff," Thompson said. "I never let anybody know I was looking at him, but I would take a glance.

"He made some big-time plays and played at a very high level at Ohio State. He can play the pass, he can play the run. He's an extremely fine player."

Hawk is a ready-made starter at weak-side linebacker and stands to quickly become the face of a defense that's been lacking star power for many years. Hawk and middle linebacker Nick Barnett will be battling for tackles supremacy throughout the season. Hawk's knack for swooping in and creating turnovers will be his greatest asset on a turnover-challenged unit.

Colledge was a four-year standout at left tackle for Boise State. The Packers, though, projected the 6-foot-4, 299-pound lineman as a guard and immediately moved him to left side of the line.

"He's exactly what we thought he was on film at Boise State. We're very excited about him," McCarthy said. "Very athletic, and, obviously, that's what we're looking for in our linemen -- the big-boned, athletic type that has ability."

The Packers are hoping Colledge will pick up where former Packers left guard Mike Wahle, who departed via free agency for Carolina in 2005, left off. Scott Wells, who has been moved to center, and veteran Adrian Klemm split time at left guard last season.

McCarthy is employing a zone-blocking scheme, which requires relatively leaner linemen who are light on their feet to get out in space. Colledge said 75-percent of Boise State's play-calling involved zone blocking.

"He definitely fits the bill for that body type for that type of lineman to play in that system," McCarthy said.

Jennings has been impressive from the first mini-camp in Green Bay. The Western Michigan product entered training camp as a strong contender for the No. 2 role opposite Donald Driver.

"I'm very impressed with Greg. He's really stepped right in. It's not too big for him, which sometimes happens to a rookie," McCarthy said. "I think he's made the transition, as far as the speed of the game."

Though the 5-foot-11 Jennings doesn't measure up to the tall standards McCarthy likes to have with his receivers, he compensates by getting in and out of his breaks quickly and has an ability to gain valuable yards after making a catch. He also will be a top candidate to return punts for the departed Antonio Chatman (Cincinnati).

"He seems very comfortable catching the football, both in the receiving aspect and the punt-return aspect," McCarthy said.

Robert Brooks was the last rookie receiver to start for the Packers (1992) on opening day.

By taking Hodge and Spitz with the 67th and 75th selections respectively of the third round, the Packers got two more of what Thompson and McCarthy referred to as 'real football players.' The Packers traded away a third pick in the third round, No. 93 overall, to the St. Louis Rams for a fourth round (109th overall) and a sixth round (183rd overall). That pick was part of the Walker trade with Denver that occurred earlier in the day.

When all was said and done, the Packers had their biggest draft class since 2000 and Thompson's biggest class during his career as a GM with both Seattle and Green Bay.

Hodge can play all three positions in a 4-3 scheme. He plays with a mean streak and sheds blockers with a strong lower body.

Spitz is a swing lineman and had played guard on both sides while at Louisville. Due to a season-ending injury to Kevin Barry in May, Spitz will be focusing on the right guard position this season in Green Bay, though he also can play center.

The Packers opened a busy second day of the draft, which yielded seven of their picks, by taking Rodgers out of TCU early in the fourth round. Rodgers doesn't project as an immediate contributor on offense, but he will be given a shot at shoring up the return position, which has lacked impact since Allen Rossum left via free agency for Atlanta in 2002. Rodgers was a one-man gang in college bringing back kickoffs and punts and, perhaps more important, catches the ball well, according to special teams coach Mike Stock. He finished in the top 10 in the country for kickoff (30.3 yards) and punt return (15.3) averages.

While special teams may be Blackmon's first chance to make a mark, he was drafted by Green Bay as a cornerback despite talking to the team prior to the draft about playing receiver. Blackmon spent his first three seasons at Boston College playing and excelling at cornerback. But with his team lacking depth in 2005, he made a bold move to switch to split end.

"I knew it would hurt me (in the draft) and affect me economically, but I wanted to help the team and help my teammates," Blackmon said.

He showcased his ball skills with a team-leading 763 yards on 51 receptions (15.0 yard average) with four touchdowns. At the NFL Scouting Combine in Indianapolis, Blackmon spent more time working out as a wide receiver and spoke with Packers coaches, among other teams, about playing there at the pro level. Later during his pro day at Boston College, Blackmon focused more on defense. He closed out his career defensively with 141 tackles and eight interceptions.

Martin, the 148th overall pick, began his collegiate career at the University of Florida under head coach Steve Spurrier. But with Rex Grossman and Chris Leak on the roster, Martin's opportunities were few and far between. He started the first four games for Florida in 2003 but suffered a concussion against Miami and was replaced by Leak. In 2004, Martin decided to transfer to Furman (Greenville, S.C.) where he started every game during his final two seasons, setting new school records for passing yards (5,761), passing touchdowns (42), and total offense (6,277). He also finished second in career passing efficiency (147.65) and third in completion percentage.

"He's a very talented kid and we think he's got a really good arm," said Thompson. "He fits the size requirements that we are looking for. I had (quarterbacks coach) Tom Clements and (head coach) Mike McCarthy do studies on him and we felt very comfortable that he would be an interesting guy to take on the second day. It's been my philosophy – and I learned this from Ron Wolf – that if you have the luxury and flexibility in terms of picks, if you find a guy on the second day that you like, you take him, put him in there and see how it works out."

In 2005, Martin set new Furman single season records for passing yards (2,959), passing touchdowns (22) and total offense (3,193). He earned All-American honors as quarterback and punter last season, averaging 42.5 yards on 34 punts with 11 that were downed inside the 20-yard line. In 27 total games at Furman, Martin shattered school records by completing 410 of 669 passes (61.3%) for 5,761 yards, 42 touchdowns and 22 interceptions. He rushed 139 times for 524 yards and eight touchdowns. He also is a strong-legged punter.

The Packers also beefed up their offensive line in the fifth round, taking 6-foot-4, 309-pound tackle Tony Moll of Nevada with the first of their two compensatory choices awarded by the NFL. Moll is an interesting choice in that he played tight end his redshirt freshman year and for the next two seasons at Nevada before moving inside to play tackle for a little more than a year.

"He was a weak-side tackle so he had experience playing on both sides of the line of scrimmage," said Packers offensive line coach Joe Philbin. "From a physical standpoint, his frame fits our mold. He's a tall guy and weighs a bit over 300 pounds. He runs very well for a man of his size so we're excited about having him. Character-wise, I think he's going to be an excellent fit."

With two sixth-round selections acquired in draft weekend trades with the Rams and Eagles, the Packers chose two players at positions where they are deep because of offseason moves.

Jolly, a 6-foot-3, 317-pound defensive tackle out of Texas A&M and Culver, a 6-foot-1, 200-pound safety out of Fresno State were chosen with the 183rd and 185th overall picks, respectively. They will have to be impressive in training camp to earn a spot on the 53-man active roster based on the competition. The Packers signed unrestricted free agent defensive tackle Ryan Pickett and unrestricted free agent safety Marquand Manuel to multi-year contracts in March. Both are expected to start at their respective positions.

Jolly was a college teammate of defensive end Michael Montgomery, whom the Packers selected in the sixth round in 2005. Jolly started for three years and excelled as a run stopper at nose tackle. He has the versatility to play the three-technique spot and move outside but is slow.

Culver played mostly center field the last two years at Fresno State, which capitalized on his quickness and range. He also was used in one-on-one coverage. He will have to make his mark on special teams to earn a roster spot.

The Packers finished the 2005 draft by selecting 6-foot-4, 255-pound defensive end Dave Tollefson out of Division II Northwest Missouri State with the 253rd overall pick.

The converted linebacker was sidetracked for three years because of injuries after he played two years at the junior college level. Tollefson resurrected his career the last two years by putting on more than 50 pounds. He dominated off the edge with a school-record 12 1/2 sacks in 2005.

Packers Taking 'Stock'

IN NEW SPECIAL TEAMS STRUCTURE

BY NATHAN HAGER, Packers.com

With 41 years of coaching experience, Stock sets out to revamp Green Bay's special teams units.

Mike Stock may be the Green Bay Packers special teams coach, but he's been around long enough to know the value of a little geometry.

In fact, Stock believes you can talk about X's and O's until you're blue in the face, but at the end of the day, it's a simple formula that translates into success.

And to the enthusiastic coaching veteran of 41 seasons at the professional and collegiate levels combined, it all comes down to a three-sided figure.

"As far as I'm concerned, if you have a piece of paper in front of you, you draw up a triangle," Stock explained. "At the very tip of that triangle, you put Packers. On one side, you put offense, on the other, you put defense, and the bottom of the triangle, you put special teams or the kicking game.

"The kicking game ties the offense and defense together because everybody is involved in it in some capacity in this league. It's a responsibility of all of us to take care of the football and to take care of field position."

Stock, who had hip replacement surgery and took last season off, understands that offense and defense often get the headlines, but also knows the importance of the job ahead of him.

"When a lot of guys talk about special teams, they don't understand or haven't been sold on the fact that it's one-third of the game," he said. "And the importance of field position is ultimately why you win or lose."

Undoubtedly Stock and assistant special teams coach Shawn Slocum have plenty of matters to tend to. After all, kicker Ryan Longwell needs to be replaced, and the punting position that B.J. Sander held last season will also be up for grabs. When you throw in the need for a kick returner or two as well as someone to replace the departed Antonio Chatman, the task seems even more daunting.

Yet, Stock loves the challenge of building from the ground up and believes that the special teams units will be a strong point for the Green and Gold, especially since there figures to be plenty of competition across the board.

One man who has his sights on the kicking job is Billy Cundiff, who played four seasons with the Dallas Cowboys. That doesn't mean the 26-year-old, who played at Division I-AA Drake in Iowa, expects the job to be handed to him, however.

"I expected competition when I signed and actually, I think that makes us all better at what we do," Cundiff explained. "I'll get pushed to perform, which will make me a better player."

No matter who replaces Longwell, one thing is certain: the Packers will enter the season with a new kicker for the first time in nearly a decade. And it will have to be someone who can deal with Lambeau Field in November and December, too.

Cundiff feels he is up to the task.

"Being from Iowa, I am well aware of the conditions," Cundiff said. "We had snow and less than ideal weather there as well. When the time comes, I just have to remain focused and confident in my abilities."

Stock makes it clear that weather is also the last thing on his mind.

"This is part of the deal," he said. "I've been to a lot of places. Green Bay is the epitome of the NFL. This is the place to be. I am so blessed to have a chance to be here.

"And this organization, with this staff, I'm excited about it. I don't care if it's July or December. The idea is to win and these fans deserve it."

According to Stock, he plans on getting the Packer faithful into the action from the get-go.

"You start the game with a kickoff, or a return, or you start the second half with a kickoff or return," Stock said. "The aim is to set the tempo. Especially at home here, the crowd of Green Bay is to set the tempo. And if we're on the road, the goal is to show the opposing crowd that the Green Bay Packers are here, and we're here with a purpose."

While it's obviously important to provide key plays in the return games, Stock acknowledges that it will be up to him and Slocum to teach the players just how to do that.

"It's not how much I know, it's getting these guys to learn about what I know. And then having them show us on Sunday. That's what this is all about."

One player that Stock can count on to set a good example and also teach teammates a thing or two in the process is fullback William Henderson,a 12-year veteran.

Like Stock, Henderson understands the importance of setting the tone for the game.

"It gives me another opportunity to go out there on the first play of the game and deliver one of the hardest collisions I can deliver, hopefully putting fear into the returner or the protection guy who's trying to keep me from getting to that returner," Henderson said.

And on the return game, my goal is to go out there and take their team down a notch because if we can execute, we're capable of having six points added to our score from the very first play. Or, we can just get a great run to put our team in better position for a scoring opportunity."

Creating that opportunity is something Henderson hopes to help Najeh Davenport do on kickoffs as he figures to be in the mix once again as a returner.

Davenport, who is coming off a broken ankle, believes he fits the profile of what it takes to play special teams.

"You have to have determination to get the job done," Davenport said. "A lot of people think you need a fast guy or a real shifty guy or a quick guy, but whoever you got, you have to want to be there."

"If you want to do it, anything can happen. I don't care how good everybody says (Kansas City's) Dante Hall is, one person is not going to do that. It takes all 11 guys working on the same page. Everybody's got to be doing the little extra because that's what will make you or break you."

"Green Bay is the epitome of the NFL," said Stock.

It's early, but Stock has set the foundation for the special teams to be successful. And judging by the enthusiasm in his voice, it would be wise to trust him when he reveals his goal for the upcoming season.

"With the guys we have on this football team, if they can stay healthy, we can be as good as anybody else," Stock said. "We have a common cause here. And the common cause is to win.

"We've been involved hands-on with these guys since March 20 and we've got good people here. Our goal is to win the championship and to do that, we need to focus on our weaknesses, elevate our expectations, and instill this daily plan to achieve what we need to achieve."

It might not be a geometric formula, but it sounds like a sound plan, no less.

Almost three decades after their second Super Bowl win, the Green Bay Packers capture another trophy.

After 29 years,

PACKERS BECOME

SUPER AGAIN

▶ BY BUD LEA, Packer Plus columnist

They waited 29 years for this day. They waited through five coaching changes and hundreds of players. They waited through years of hearing Green Bay never again would be Titletown USA.

Never mind where the Green Bay Packers had been all those years. Never mind the countless teams that had rubbed their hands greedily and waited for the Green Bay Patsies. Never again could they say that.

Ten years ago, Super Bowl XXXI was played in the Louisiana Superdome and the wait was over. The Packers were back on center stage, taking on the New England Patriots for the biggest prize in pro football.

The Packers were favored to win it. Under the demanding guidance of head coach Mike Holmgren, they had played with reckless fury during the 1996 season, cruising to a 13-3 record. They had taken the NFC title with a minimum of exertion in the playoffs, crushing the San Francisco 49ers, 35-14, and the Carolina Panthers, 30-13.

In addition to having the NFL's No. 1 scoring offense, Green Bay also led the league in scoring defense and total defense.

They had the biggest stars: Brett Favre, Reggie White, LeRoy Butler, Keith Jackson and Frank Winters all were elected to the Pro Bowl. There were so many others: Antonio Freeman, Edgar Bennett, Mark Chmura, Robert Brooks, Dorsey Levens, Earl Dotson, Gilbert Brown, Santana Dotson, Sean Jones, Eugene Robinson, William Henderson, Chris Jacke.

This truly was a machine thanks to general manager Ron Wolf, who had transformed the Packers from the cellar to the Super Bowl in five years through shrewd trades, deft drafting, key free-agent signings and successful gambles on other teams' castoffs.

But most of all they had Desmond Howard, who had signed a one-year, near-minimum $300,000 contract with the Packers just before the start of training camp after failing to catch on with the Washington Redskins and Jacksonville Jaguars. Howard was listed in the program at 5-foot-10, 180 pounds, but the consensus was, that's a prediction. When he returned punts and kickoffs, he accelerated faster than a guy who heard the cops are coming.

The AFC champions were not, however, without ammunition of their own.

The Patriots had strong-armed quarterback Drew Bledsoe and pass-rushing terror Willie McGinest, rocket-fueled wideout Terry Glenn and hard-hitting linebacker Chris Slade, powerful tight end Ben Coates and running back Curtis Martin.

They also had Bill Parcells, whom Patriots owner Robert Kraft called "the greatest coach in the history of the game in modern times." Parcells was 2-0 in Super Bowls, both wins coming when he coached the New York Giants.

They anointed Parcells. They called him "Super Bill," "The Big Tuna," "Old Blood and Guts." He was as cold as a marble statue. New England fans vowed he was worth two touchdowns per game.

The Packers' long-awaited return to the Super Bowl was an uplifting story in the Big Easy. But during the week leading up to the game, it took second billing to the speculation about Parcells' uncertain future.

His contract with the Patriots would effectively end with the final play of the Super Bowl, and the biggest story coming out of New Orleans was he would bolt from the Patriots and take over the New York Jets and have total control, something he didn't have in New England.

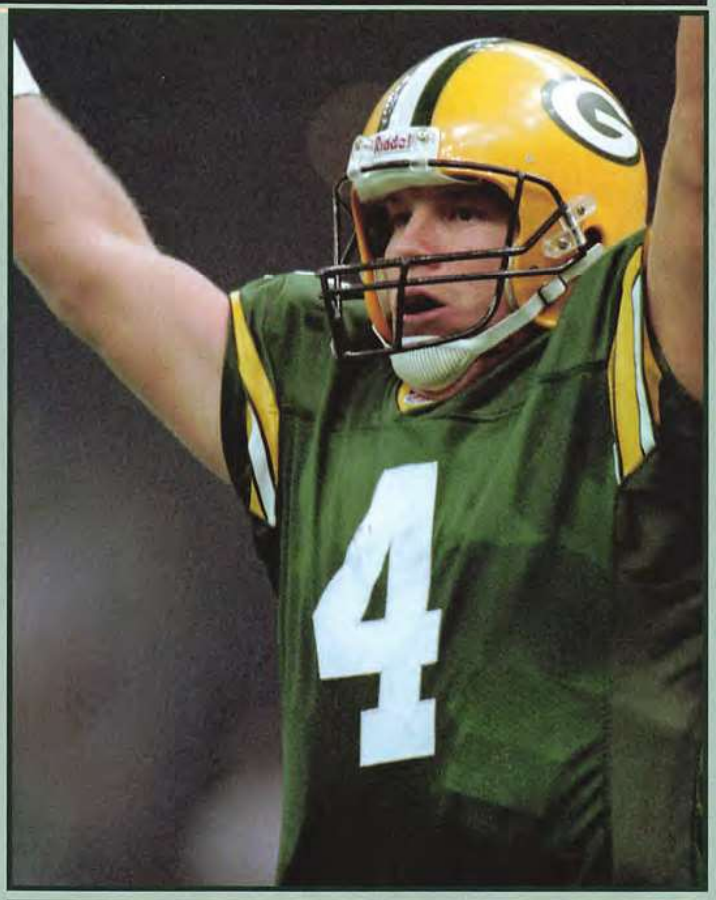
The Packers got so tired of reading, hearing and being asked about Parcells each day that Holmgren told them repeatedly not to lose their focus. But he was as bothered as his players by the Parcells overkill.

There was nothing complicated about what Holmgren told his team. That was clear to everyone who heard his pregame speech during which he said, "I don't have to show you how to win this game. I've already shown you how to win. You don't need me to hold your hand. Now go out and do it."

The Superdome was rocking with 72,301 spectators as the teams took the field. And judging from the volume of cheers, the Cheeseheads outnumbered the Chowderheads 3-to-1.

The Patriots won the toss and elected to receive. They ran five plays and punted to Howard, who returned 32 yards – a signal that No. 81 could not be taken for granted by New England.

On his first attempt of the game, Favre fired a 54-yard touchdown pass to Andre Rison, a speedy wide receiver who had been picked off the scrap heap by Wolf to step in where injured Robert Brooks stepped out. It was vintage Favre, the NFL's MVP. The Patriots had brought their safeties up tight, and Favre went into a blitz audible. Rison got behind everyone and Favre made a perfect throw.



Super Bowl XXXI

On New England's ensuing possession, Green Bay cornerback Doug Evans cut in front of Glenn and made a juggling interception of a Bledsoe pass at the Patriots' 21. That led to a 37-yard field goal by Chris Jacke and a 10-0 Green Bay lead. It had all the makings of a rout.

Then the momentum swung completely to New England for the remainder of the first period. The Patriots took a stunning 14-10 lead on a pair of Bledsoe touchdown passes and, in the process, had the Packers' defense completely looking baffled trying to cover play-action passes, screens and rollouts.

Green Bay defensive coordinator Fritz Shurmur had seen enough. He called together several key players on his unit and delivered a scorching message.

"Enough is enough!" Shurmur screamed. "Pull your head out of your a-- and go do what you're supposed to do." Then, to Butler, he added, "Go get Bledsoe. Do whatever it takes. I'll blitz you every play if I have to – just get in his face. I want him to feel you and worry about where you are all the time."

It worked, dramatically. Eventually Butler and the Packers got to Bledsoe, who ended up throwing four interceptions and absorbing five sacks while completing 25 of 48 passes for 253 yards.

The Packers controlled the second quarter. It started when the Patriots tried to cover Freeman with safety Lawyer Milloy. In press coverage at the line, Milloy missed the jam and Favre hit the wide-open Freeman for an 81-yard touchdown, setting a Super Bowl record for the longest scoring pass.

Then Jacke kicked a 31-yard field goal after Mike Prior intercepted a poorly thrown Bledsoe pass. Favre marched the Packers 74 yards in nine plays and scored the next touchdown himself by rolling left and lunging across the goal line to stretch Green Bay's lead at halftime to 27-14.

The Patriots made things exciting again late in the third quarter. They cut the Packers' lead to 27-21 on a seven-play, 53-yard touchdown drive that culminated in Curtis Martin's 18-yard run. "We felt good about ourselves at that point," Patriot safety Willie Clay said. "We knew we were still in the game."

But not for long.

This was going to be Howard's day. Make no mistake about that.

At halftime he told Favre that he was going to take one of the Patriots' kickoffs back – that it was only a matter of time.

Special teams coach Nolan Cromwell had told Howard he thought he could score on a middle return and so he had his wedge go straight up the field on the ensuing kickoff. Howard let Don Beebe lead the way and linebackers Lamont Hollinquist and Keith McKenzie clear out a path to the left.

"When I came up, I was leading him and I saw how big the hole was," Beebe said. "I said, 'Wow, we're going to score.' All I had to do was get on the safety, put my helmet in his pads, and then it's (Howard) and the kicker and there's no way the kicker's going to tackle Desmond in the open field. It's impossible. As soon as I made the block, I looked up, and there he goes."

Howard took the ball on the 1, burst up the middle and swept through the Patriots' coverage for a 99-yard sprint to the game's biggest touchdown and the Super Bowl MVP award.

You didn't have to be big to be a Green Bay return man. Just good.

The Packers didn't measure his height or weight – just his length. And 244 yards in returns – 154 on four kickoffs and 90 on six punts – against the Patriots made Howard stand mighty tall.

Tired and battered and well aware what the Packers would throw at them, the Patriots had gone as far as they could. With a 14-point lead, Reggie White's intensity surged, and there was nothing the Patriots could do about it.

On a second-down play, White bulled over Patriots right tackle Max Lane and sacked Bledsoe for an 8-yard loss. A play later, he ran around Lane and Bledsoe again for a 6-yard loss. Then, with 1:49 left in the game, White roared in again and picked up his third sack, a Super Bowl record.

The better team won, 35-21. The Patriots finished with just 257 yards, only 43 rushing in a strange game that really didn't even test the Packers on the ground.

Finally it ended with confetti raining down on the field and Mike Holmgren being hoisted on his players' shoulders. And there was White, finally winning the Big One after 12 years in the league, taking victory laps while hoisting the Vince Lombardi Trophy – football's ultimate prize.

In the glow of the greatest triumph the Packers had experienced in 29 years, Bob Harlan had the team's fans foremost on his mind.

"This is the best," the Packers' president said. "The fans waited and waited and waited. But they hung with us."

The Lombardi Trophy was heading home. Where it belonged.

THE 1966 CHAMPIONSHIP GAME

▶ BY ART DALEY

And in a traditional gesture, the Packers players lifted Coach Lombardi to their shoulders for a ride of admiration as they headed toward the dressing room.

Lombardi had four of these championship rides in the last six years – twice in Green Bay in 1961 and 1965, in New York in 1962 and now in Dallas in 1966."

The Packers had just beaten the Dallas Cowboys 34-27 for their 10th National Football League title plus a trip to the inaugural Super Bowl, and this newspaper description of Lombardi's ride said it all.

Yes, there was something special about this victory – probably the most exciting of the Pack's championship playoffs, thanks to a blocked extra point.

What was special? 34 points! They never scored that many all season except 56 against the new Atlanta Falcons. The Pack played Dallas in a league game in '65 and scored one touchdown. They lost preseason games to the Cowboys in '65 and '66 without scoring a touchdown.

Perhaps the Cotton Bowl audience of 74,152, minus 3,500 sign-carrying Packer Backers seated together, wondered how the Packers could score enough points. After all, the Cowboys led the league with 445 points, an average of 31.8 per game. The Packers had scored 335 points on the season, just 23.9 per game.

It was no secret the Packers were a defensive-minded team. Allowing under 12 points per game in '66 produced a 12-2 season, while Dallas' 10-3-1 record was backed by a defense allowing over 17 points per game.

Oddly, Lombardi made a prediction the day before the game stating, "This contest could be high scoring. If Starr has a real hot day, we'll win it. If Meredith has a real hot day, they'll probably win it."

Bart Starr threw four touchdown passes with 19 completions in 28 throws for 304 yards. Don Meredith was 15 of 31 for 238 yards including one touchdown, a 68-yarder that gave Dallas a final chance, and one interception.

Lombardi could be pardoned for gloating a bit after the game. He laughed, "They say we don't have an offense. We had it when we needed it. We knew we had to score points to beat this club."

Lombardi also honored his QB, exclaiming, "No one ever played a better game than Bart today. If anyone ever did, you'd have to show me and I wouldn't believe it."

Starr won the NFL's passing championship in '66 and was also named the league's MVP. He completed 62.2 percent of his passes and had only three interceptions, a league-record.

Amazingly, Dallas "out played" the Packers, running 73 plays compared to the Packers' 58 and piling up 418 yards against the Pack's 367. Also, Dallas had the edge in first downs, 23-19.

This game was destined to be a thriller right from the start. Each team scored 14 points in the first quarter, with the Pack running out to a 14-0 lead. There was a feeling early in the game that this might be a Packer landslide. No way!

The Packers won the toss and on their first play Elijah Pitts, starting for the injured Paul Hornung, raced 32 yards into Cowboy territory. Five plays later, Starr passed to Pitts for a touchdown. Don Chandler, who predicted before the game he'd "like to kick five extra points," converted.

Twelve seconds later, the Packers doubled their lead. Mel Renfro fumbled the kickoff when hit by Bob Brown and Gale Gillingham, two of the Packers' ace rookies. Jim Grabowski, another rookie, picked up the fumble and ambled 18 yards and a 14-point Packer lead.

All of a sudden, the Packers' defensive reputation went south as the Cowboys scored two touchdowns in 18 plays to tie the score. Dan Reeves capped a 65-yard drive with a three-yard TD run. After forcing the Packers to punt, Don Perkins rambled 23 yards for another score, capping a 59-yard drive.

The tie didn't last long as Starr hurled a long pass that "missed" a leaping Cornell Green and fell into the arms of Carroll Dale for a 51-yard score to open the second quarter. Danny Villanueva connected on an 11-yard field goal to cap the first half scoring. The Packers headed to the locker room holding a slight 21-17 advantage.

After Villanueva's 32-yard field goal cut the Packer lead to one, 21-20, the Green and Gold responded with a six-play scoring drive. On the first play of the drive, Starr hit Dale for a 43-yard gain. Five plays later, Starr connected with Boyd Dowler on a 16-yard strike to give the Pack a 28-20 lead.

Midway through the fourth quarter, Starr culminated an eight-play, 52-yard drive with a 23-yard TD pass to Max McGee. The game might have been put out of reach with the extra point, but Chandler's attempt was low and blocked by Bob Lilly. With the score 34-20, the Cowboys now had a chance to send the game to sudden death with two touchdowns.

The Cowboys immediately stormed back to get within reach. Facing a third-and-20, Meredith connected with Frank Clarke, a Beloit, Wis., native, on a 68-yard touchdown. Suddenly, the Cowboys only trailed by a score.

Dallas quickly forced the Packers to punt, and Cowboys fans got more good news when Chandler's kick traveled just 16 yards, giving the Cowboys position on the Pack's 47-yard line. Meredith hit Clarke for a 21-yard gain, then missed him in the end zone on the ensuing play. Green Bay's Dave Robinson was called for pass interference, giving the Cowboys a first down on the Packer 2-yard line with 1:52 remaining in the game.

Reeves got the call on first down, but his one-yard gain was negated by tackle Jim Boekse's illegal procedure. Two plays later, Meredith hit Pettis Norman with a short pass before Norman was stopped by Packer safety Tom Brown on the 1-yard line.

On fourth down from the 1-yard line with the league championship in the balance, Meredith rolled out for a pass. Linebacker Dave Robinson broke through the line and gave chase, trapping Meredith on the sideline. Meredith got the pass away just as he was hugged by Robinson. Safety Tom Brown intercepted the pass in the end zone, ending the game.

Fittingly, the large contingent of Packer fans was sitting near the goal line where Brown's interception sealed the victory.

The Packers went on to win Super Bowl I two weeks later, beating the Kansas City Chiefs 35-10. A year later, the Packers would beat this same Cowboys team 21-17 in the famous Ice Bowl for their 11th NFL title. The Pack went on to defend their Super Bowl title and bested Oakland 33-14 in Super Bowl II – Lombardi's last game as head coach.

It would be 30 more years before the Packers would win their 12th. The 1996 team whipped the New England Patriots 35-21 in Super Bowl XXXI behind a second Bart Starr – one Brett Favre.

THE MINISTER

▶ BY TIM FROBERG, Appleton Post-Crescent

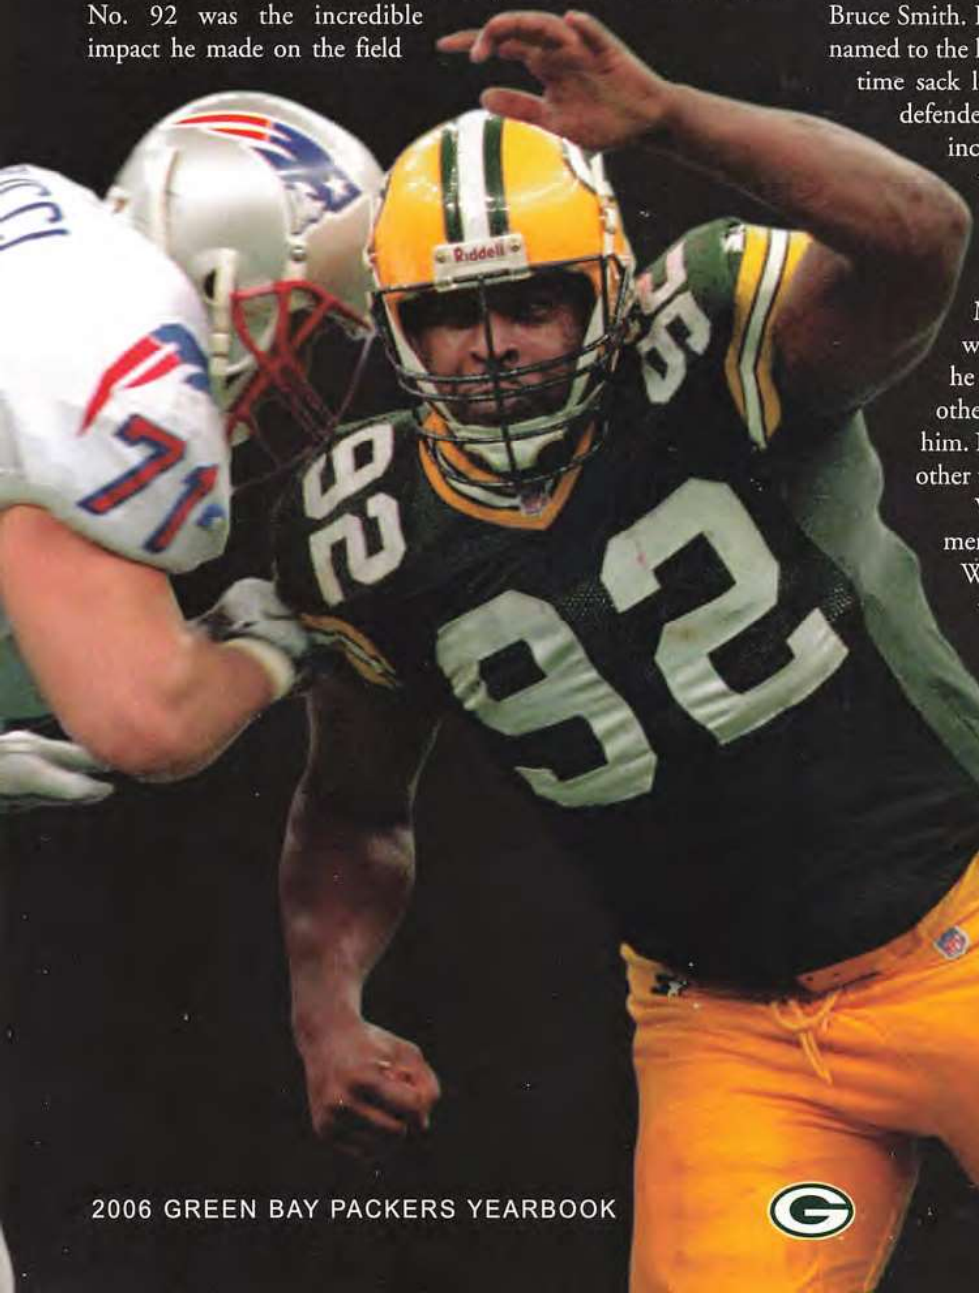
GREEN BAY — He was an ordained minister who loved to quote the Bible, yet he flourished in a violent game and put the fear of God into quarterbacks with some of the most prolific and punishing pass-rush skills on the planet.

He was a millionaire many times over, yet became downright giddy when teammates walked into the locker room and dropped his lunch order of a couple of Burger King Whoppers onto his lap.

He could inspire in the very different venues of the church and locker room with his serious and sobering words, yet was a cut-up among friends, many of whom still get the giggles when reminiscing about him.

There was a lot to Green Bay Packers legend Reggie White. He had different sides to his personality and had a sack full of contradictions and quirks. But what was always clear and consistent about No. 92 was the incredible impact he made on the field and the aura of greatness that surrounded him.



White may have been the best to ever play his defensive end position and some consider him to be the finest defensive player of all time. He seemed bound for Canton the day he put on an NFL uniform and that's exactly where he wound up: among the hallowed busts at The Pro Football Hall of Fame, where he will be inducted in early August.

The former Packers sack machine was an easy choice for induction, putting up dazzling numbers and setting a standard of excellence along the defensive line that may be never matched. He was elected to a record 13 consecutive Pro Bowls and named as an All-Pro in 13 of his 15 NFL seasons. White was a two-time NFL Defensive Player of the Year (1987 and 1998) and retired in 2000 as the NFL's all-time sacks leader with 198, a mark since passed by Bruce Smith. He registered 10-plus sacks in a season 12 times, was named to the league's 75th anniversary team and is the Packers' all-time sack leader with 68½. White also was a dominant run defender throughout a celebrated 15-year NFL career that included eight seasons with the Philadelphia Eagles, six with the Packers and a final one with the Carolina Panthers.

"Boy, you talk about a unique player," said former Packer and current team broadcaster Larry McCarren. "People always talk about his sacks, but he was one of the few that played the run just as well as he rushed the quarterback. Teams would always run the other way against Reggie because no one could block him. Now if the guys on defense know the ball is going the other way, that gives you a heck of an advantage."

White gave the Packers a heck of an advantage in his memorable days (1993-98) wearing green and gold. White was one of the difference-makers — teaming with general manager Ron Wolf, head coach Mike Holmgren and a rocket-flinging young quarterback named Brett Favre — to resurrect a franchise that had been floundering on the field for years.

White is gone now — taken from this Earth far too soon at the shockingly young age of 43. But memories of the late, great defensive end won't fade any time soon. The image of White bounding around the Louisiana Superdome, thrusting the Lombardi Trophy high above his head following Green Bay's Super Bowl XXI victory is a vivid memory burned inside the brain of every Packers fan. It was a magical moment that

"Green Bay was back in the football mix the day Reggie White signed."

-Larry McCarren

signaled the Packers were back at the summit of the pro football world following a 30-year absence.

Perhaps the brains of Wolf and Holmgren, and the bravado and breathtaking skills of Favre would have gotten the Packers there. But without White, many believe that Titletown would have one less world title.

"I doubt it very seriously," said Packers fullback William Henderson and a former teammate of White when asked if Green Bay would have won a Super Bowl and made back-to-back Super Bowl appearances without White. "I don't know if we would have had the personnel. Reggie was the one who got guys like Keith Jackson to leave warm-weather teams and come play for what, Southern Canada? He was the one who mentored young guys like myself, Aaron Taylor, Craig Newsome, Dorsey Levens and Edgar Bennett. His impact was monumental."

McCarren, a starting center on Packer teams that had only one winning season from 1973-84, agrees.

"No, I don't think they go to a Super Bowl without Reggie," said McCarren. "As far as contending for a championship, I think the defining moment that Green Bay was back in the football mix was the day Reggie White signed here."

White sent shock waves through the pro football world in the spring of 1993 when he inked a four-year, $17 milllion free agent contract with a Packers franchise that was just starting to find its way out of a 20-year maze of mediocrity.

Former team president and current chief executive officer Bob Harlan remembers the day that Wolf told him of his plans to pursue White, then the most prominent and expensive prize in the short history of free agency. Harlan felt the Packers were a longshot to lure this big fish to Green Bay's smaller pond.

"He was already such an icon in this league," said Harlan. "It surprised me when Ron came in and said, 'We want to take a run at Reggie and it's going to cost us X amount of dollars.' I thought, you know, it's going to be really tough to do. I mean, he was the most attractive free agent the NFL ever had and ever will have."

White, who was being courted heavily by Washington, Cleveland and Detroit, later told Harlan that initially he never planned to play for the Packers, but decided to visit Green Bay simply out of courtesy.

"He flew down here and sat down with Ron, Mike and Ray Rhodes and talked football," said Harlan. "All they did was talk football to a football player. Everyone else was blowing up balloons and hiring bands."

With White's signature on a Green Bay contract, an improving Packer team instantly became a contender, and a franchise that needed to lose an image as the NFL's Siberia suddenly had credibility.

"Reggie's signing officially put Green Bay back on the football map," said McCarren. "Free agency was the thing that was supposed to kill little old Green Bay. Then, we sign the free agent of all free agents."

When White arrived in Green Bay, he already was well-known and highly respected around the league by his peers. He became a 300-pound Pied Piper, talking up the coaching staff and franchise to opposing players and eventually persuaded quality veterans with impressive NFL resumes like Jackson, a tight end with a nose for the end zone, and Sean Jones, a rock-solid defensive end, to play in the league's smallest and perhaps chilliest city. With White and Favre on board, cold-weather Green Bay became a cool place to play.

"Reggie made guys really respect the idea of coming here and that wasn't easy," said Henderson. "When I first came into the league, some NFL players told me, 'Best of luck, but if at all possible, don't go to Green Bay because nothing's there.' And when I got here, I thought, 'They were right.' It seemed like there were only four restaurants in town and you better have a lot of room at your place if relatives are in town because there was nowhere to stay. But since the success of the Green Bay Packers, this town has grown tremendously and people have put it on the map again as one of their favorite places."

Said Harlan: "I think people like Sean Jones and Keith Jackson were much more willing to come to Green Bay at that point in their careers because Reggie was here. He let African-American players and all players know that this is a good place to play. You've got a great stadium, a great fan base and wonderful tradition. Take a look at it."

White was more than just a game-changing player. He was a natural leader who influenced young players with his professionalism, integrity and honesty.

"He was one of the first persons I talked to after walking into this locker room," said Henderson. "He calmed me down and took a lot of angst off me that rookies usually come in with. Reggie kept all of us on an even keel and he was a good go-between between the coaching staff and the players to make sure the players understood what the coaches were asking. He kept us humble when we had success. He was one of those guys who wouldn't allow you to let success go to your head."

White, who had become an ordained Baptist minister at the age of 17, never hesitated to let his teammates know of God's game plan and his deeply spiritual nature never wavered. He often led team Bible sessions. But he also had a playful, silly side and mixed easily with fellow teammates. He was one of the guys and a funny one at that, doing credible impressions of boxer Muhammad Ali, Clint Eastwood's "Dirty Harry" character and comedian-actor Bill Cosby.

White never hesitated to let his teammates know of God's game plan and his deeply spiritual nature never wavered.

"Oh, he was amazing to be around," said Henderson. "He wasn't always this serious guy. He was a practical joker and an impressionist. Ali was one of his favorite people of all time and he did him well. He liked to do Bill Cosby's Jello pudding line and could do Richard Pryor, the clean version. If he found something he liked, he'd be doing it until the wheels fell off. He was always singing 'Amazing Grace'. He had this scratchy, baritone voice and he thought for sure he could sing."

Bennett, White's former teammate and the Packers' running back coach, says his favorite memories of White were the short drives from the locker room to the practice field in White's SUV.

"Reggie was unbelievably funny," said Bennett. "Some of my best moments were riding down to practice with Reggie and guys like LeRoy (Butler), Sean Jones and George Koonce. It was only a five-minute ride, but for those five minutes it was comedy central. We really had some good times, some tremendous times."

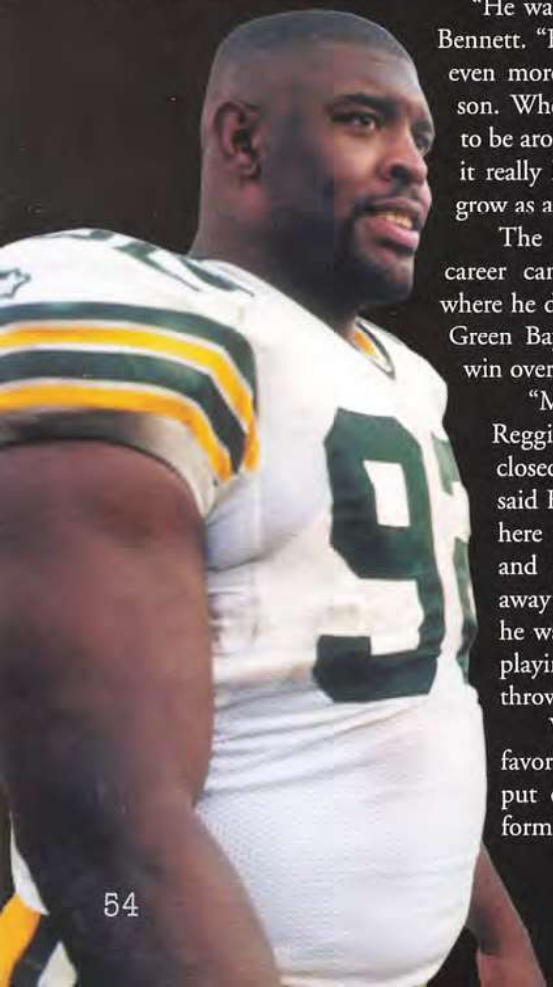
And White, Bennett and the Packers had some tremendous times on the field, too. White, known for a repertoire of pass-rush moves such as the swim, the rip and the club, was a beastly combination of size, strength, speed and power. And like most legends, he had a flair for the dramatic. Early in his first season as a Packer, he sealed a 30-27 win over Denver with back-to-back sacks of John Elway to a thunderous Lambeau Field chant of "Reg-gie, Reg-gie." Those two game-saving sacks quickly validated his expensive price tag and White kept piling up the sacks, while the Packers kept piling up wins.



"He was just dominant," said Bennett. "But to me, Reggie was even more impressive as a person. When you have a chance to be around a person like that, it really helps you mature and grow as a person."

The highlight of White's career came in New Orleans, where he delivered three sacks in Green Bay's 35-21 Super Bowl win over New England.

"My favorite memory of Reggie was the way he closed out the Super Bowl," said Harlan. "He had come here to win a Super Bowl and he was just minutes away from doing that and he was just driven. He was playing like a young kid, throwing people around."

White was a fan favorite from the instant he put on a Green Bay uniform and will go down as the one of the most beloved Packers ever. Following home wins, he used to exit Lambeau Field like a rock star departing the stage, working the crowd to a fever pitch and then exchanging high-fives before tossing his baseball cap into the stands.

"Reggie took the time to acknowledge the fans," said Harlan. "Instead of just going onto the field, he would greet them at the tunnel and after games he'd walk around the edge of the field, shaking their hands. They loved that. He didn't just take the cheers and move on."

The Packers' world was rocked on Dec. 26, 2004, when White — just fours years following his retirement — passed away unexpectedly due to a respiratory disease. He left behind his loving wife, Sara, a son, Jeremy, a daughter, Jecolia, and millions of stunned fans and admirers.

"Reggie's death, that's one of those things that just doesn't add up," said McCarren. "The fact that he wasn't here for his Hall of Fame induction is really amazing. It's hard to even fathom."

Said Bennett: "That was just unbelievable. For me, it was one of those situations where I had just talked to him the week before. He was always so full of life. It was a tremendous blow. But I consider it to be an incredible blessing to have been around a person like that."

White's No. 92 jersey has been retired by the Packers, and his name and number will always be a part of Lambeau Field, displayed in the north end zone alongside the likes of Tony Canadeo, Don Hutson, Bart Starr and Ray Nitschke. The Minister of Defense didn't turn water into wine, but he did help turn back the clock, making the `90s seem like the `60s again with Green Bay's football revival.

White remains an inspiration to younger players, even those who never even had an opportunity to meet him, such as rookie linebacker Abdul Hodge.

"I always try and play like Reggie White played — like every down is my last," said Hodge. "Reggie White was the heart and soul of the Packers."

Marquand Manuel
FINDS HIS PLACE

BY PETER JACKEL, Racine Journal Times

Holed up in the serenity of Ray Rhodes' office as Seattle's notorious overcast skies blotted out yet another sunrise, the kid and the mentor used to break away from the monotony of coverage diagrams and drift off into the psyche of some of the great safeties of the last 25 years.

X's and O's were replaced by heart and soul during those gratifying moments of digress as Rhodes passed along to Marquand Manuel what he thought separated the elite from the ordinary. Rhodes, the Seattle Seahawks defensive coordinator, had a quarter century of coaching experience to draw from and Manuel listened with an impassioned interest as the old master spun his stories.

"We used to meet at six in the morning and we would break film down and talk about the game," Manuel said. "With 20-some years of experience, being a head coach and being a defensive coordinator for so many years … I mean, he coached Hall of Famers and All-Pros and he just has that knowledge of the game. He understands the big picture. I think that's the biggest thing."

As Rhodes and Manuel studied the celluloid images, one player who jumped off the projection screen was a Seahawks' legend who forged an exceptional career in Seattle from 1985-95.

He was a ball-hawking safety with charismatic leadership skills who would one day be instrumental in leading the Packers to consecutive Super Bowl appearances during the twilight of his career.

His name was Eugene Robinson. And while Manuel has never met him, he is well-versed in the man's legacy.

"We talked about him and the things he did, like understanding the game and the sacrifices guys like him and Ronnie Lott and LeRoy Butler made to be successful in this game," Manuel said.

Could it be that on the 10th anniversary of Robinson's arrival in Green Bay, another former Seahawks safety is arriving on the scene to make an indelible imprint on the Packers' defense? Could it be that a physically gifted player who is still figuring out just how good he can be is bringing with him the very same characteristics that helped elevate the Packers to new heights?

Well, there is a significant contrast in that Robinson was a seasoned 33-year-old veteran with a pair of Pro Bowl appearances to his credit when he joined the Packers while Manuel is 27 and is still seeking to establish himself as a legitimate starter.

At the same time, credible comparisons can be made in terms of the impact Robinson made in Green Bay and the impact Manuel could potentially make - both on the field with his talent and in the locker room with his natural leadership skills. Furthermore, Manuel will likely have more time to make a lasting impact as a Packer considering his youth and that he signed a five-year, $10 million contract on the first day of free agency.

"I'm extremely happy to have the opportunity to come here and have the opportunity to help turn the program around," said Manuel, who was ranked fifth on the Seahawks in tackles last season with 71. "They've been to the playoffs, but they're just missing a couple of pieces and, hopefully, I'll be part of that puzzle."

Just as Robinson once was.

Now, a cynic might point out that the Packers are coming off a 4-12 season while the team Robinson joined was fresh off an appearance in the NFC championship game. But if you see things through more optimistic eyes, you might speculate that the Packers' rash of injuries last season was an unfortunate aberration and that players the likes of Manuel might just make an enormous difference.

Manuel with defensive backfield mate, Charles Woodson

Just who is Marquand Manuel?

We're talking about one of 18 children who grew up in the simmering streets of Miami, yet was prevented from taking a wrong turn by his always attentive mother, Mary.

"I thank God every day for keeping me out of a lot of things I could have been involved in," Manuel said. "Instead of going down this way, I decided to catch the bus and go this way. I had that holy spirit talk to me at different times in my life and my mom was my backbone.

"I knew I couldn't get a DUI because I knew that would have killed her. That would have crushed her heart after everything she built up. You knew what was right. At the end of the day, you knew what was right."

We're talking about someone who learned valuable lessons from his older siblings, especially when he endured brother John almost dying following a head-on collision with a drunk driver just before John's junior season as a linebacker for Florida State in 1989.

"Seeing him make it through that and, at the same time, seeing how he would have loved to have played this game, I think that's the biggest thing I took from it," Manuel said. "Knowing he couldn't even play at the collegiate level anymore, I think that just gave me the drive to succeed and get past where he was."

We're talking about someone who once took as many as 20 credits in a semester while playing for Florida, attended summer school classes and earned a degree in criminology in less than four years.

"A lot of guys just wanted to do certain things, but I knew I had to get my education as fast as I could in college because it wasn't promised to me," Manuel said. "And I really think that's what drives me every day. Nothing's promised."

We're talking about someone who was drafted by the Cincinnati Bengals in the sixth round of the 2002 NFL Draft, was waived two years later and eventually worked himself into a starting position for the Seahawks in Super Bowl XL last February. It was midway through last season when Manuel stepped in for injured starter Ken Hamlin and did nothing but impress Seahawks coach Mike Holmgren.

"It's a great story," Holmgren said during a press conference leading up to the Super Bowl. "He was one of 18 children. He has had to battle for his place his whole life. He appreciates everything. He works hard for everything. He doesn't expect anything to be given to him and I can't say enough about the young guy."

In fact, it would not at all be far-fetched to suggest that had Manuel not pulled a groin in the second quarter, forcing him to make way for former practice squad player Eric Pruitt, Seattle might be the reigning Super Bowl champion. Pruitt was caught out of position during Willie Parker's Super Bowl-record 75-yard touchdown run, helping set the tone in the Pittsburgh Steelers' 21-10 victory.

"I tried to keep the guys up and let them know I was going to be fine, but at the same time, you would never know the outcome of the game if I would have stayed in the game," Manuel said. "I was in tears after the game, knowing that if I would have played, I would have made a difference.

"I would love to get that opportunity again."

And now we're talking about the possible long-term solution for the Packers at one of their two safety positions. Packers general manager Ted Thompson was serving as vice president of football operations for the Seahawks when he signed Manuel as a free agent in 2004. Some 18 months later, Thompson signed Manuel for the Packers as a much more valued free agent.

Just as one would expect from Manuel, he wasted no time making an impact on his new teammates with his understated style of leadership.

"They see me go about my business every day when I come in," Manuel said. "I laugh and joke. I'm human. I do all that. At the same time, when I come in day in and day out, I go about my business. I'm always talking about adjusting plays, just talking about the game, man.

"I think that's being more of a leader than just coming in and saying, 'Do it this way, do it this way, do it this way.' I didn't earn respect in Seattle doing it that way. I just came in and did it the way I always did it."

PACKERS TRADITION LIVES ON:

FIGHT SONG CELEBRATES 75TH ANNIVERSARY

TOM ANDREWS, Packer Report

The Lumberjack Band or Legion Band of Green Bay, Wisconsin, was the first band to successfully introduce "GO! YOU PACKERS GO!"

GO! YOU PACKERS GO!

Hail, hail the gang's all here to yell for you,
And keep you going in your winning ways,
Hail, hail the gang's all here to tell you too,
That win or lose,
we'll always sing your praises Packers;
Chorus:
Go, you Packers, go and get 'em,
Go, you fighting fools upset 'em,
Smash their line with all your might,
A touchdown, Packers, Fight, Fight, Fight, Fight!
On, you Green and Gold, to glory,
Win this game the same old story,
Fight, you Packers,
Fight, and bring the bacon home to Old Green Bay.

— Words and music by Eric Karll, 1931

The odds are most Packer fans will instantly recognize the melody - the rousing, marching band tune that's been a part of Green and Gold tradition since head coach Curly Lambeau himself roamed the sidelines. However, very few of these fans know the words to the official fight song written for their beloved team some 75 years ago.

"Go! You Packers Go!" was penned in 1931 by Milwaukee composer Eric Karll for two simple reasons: he loved football and he loved the Green Bay Packers. "Talk of the Packers has been in the family ever since I've been around," said Jeff Karll, Eric's great nephew who lives in Madison with his wife, Kathy, and their two boys. "The funny thing is, when you look at the lyrics you can tell it was from that time period, the 1930s. I imagine if you surveyed the fans at Lambeau Field you wouldn't find many that know the actual words of the song but it's kind of neat. It's about the camaraderie of the team and it really signifies what a fight song or a marching song should be all about."

A jingle writer and former Vaudeville composer, Eric Karll also had a nationally syndicated radio show in the late 1920s and early 1930s. Another lesser known fact is that he wrote a piece called "Welcome, Mr. Roosevelt," which became the rallying theme for one of FDR's presidential campaigns. Karll's Packer tune was first played publicly by the famous 22-piece Packer Lumberjack Band the year that he wrote it. Talk about perfect timing! That very same year the Packers won their third straight National Football League championship under Lambeau.

The Lumberjack Band, with members appropriately garbed in hunting caps, corduroy pants, plaid lumberjack shirts, and high marching boots, played "Go! You Packers Go!" during kickoffs and at various other points during the games. The band is also legendary for its boisterous performances for Packer fans on the trains from Wisconsin to Chicago each year for the annual duels with the hated Chicago Bears. The Lumberjacks were even cited by Chicago police for performing without a parade permit after they marched through the downtown area and played in several hotel lobbies while raising quite a racket, much to the chagrin of the locals.

Music has always been an important part of the Green Bay Packer tradition. In 1938, Packer president Lee Joannes asked Wilner Burke to form an official Green Bay Packer band. Burke, a member of the Packers Hall of Fame, was the band's director until 1981, never missing a rehearsal or performance with the Packer band over 44 seasons. The band continued to use the "Lumberjack" name until the Vince Lombardi era when Burke was asked to change the name to the Green Bay Packer band. Among the many area musicians Burke recruited for the band in 1969 was a trumpeter named Lovell Ives.

"At that time, it was more of a military band," Ives recalled. "They wanted something updated so we turned it into a Big Band. We had to change a lot of personnel in the band and we only retained nine members of the old 32-member band and hired more updated players who could handle Big Band jazz and a rhythm section with piano, guitar, saxophones, brass and bass as opposed to just drums and tubas."

The band became a sidelines staple, playing the Packer fight song and other favorites to rev up the Lambeau crowd on Sunday afternoons. "It was very exciting," Ives chuckled. "You had to be on time with the two-minute breaks during time outs. You had to stop playing as soon as the players came out of the huddle so it was up to the band director to make sure you weren't infringing on that."

Ives replaced Burke as director in 1982. "(Public address announcer) Gary Knafelc and I would communicate on the time elements when there would be a time-out coming up or what was going to happen at the end of a quarter," Ives recalled. "I wrote a lot of the music myself to accommodate a two-minute break because the arrangements were usually too long. We had to cut them down to about a minute and a half so we had lead time on either side. We also had to be aware of commercials and their time restraints because TV has to be on time."

Lambeau Field's musical structure underwent more change in the early '90s. "They moved to the Jumbotron and they decided to go with canned music as opposed to a live band in the stadium," said Ives, admitting there were legitimate reasons for the change. "As it got colder late into the season, there were problems for the band in supplying good music. Things would freeze up, that kind of thing."

So Packers president and CEO Bob Harlan helped devise a compromise. A recording of "Go! You Packers Go!" was added to the canned music mix at the stadium. The song is played on each game day immediately following the Packers' player introductions and after each Packers extra point. In addition, the song is played about every fifth tune by the "Packer Tailgaters," the three six-member musical units formed by the former band members. In the two hours prior to the start of each home game, they stroll through the Lambeau Field Parking lot, adding to the festive mood of the tailgate scene.

The Packers certainly weren't the only team with their own fight song. In 1960, the NFL Marching Band, conducted by Bernard Green, produced a record album featuring the fight songs of all 13 teams then in the league. The album, which is still very popular among sports memorabilia collectors, featured stars from the various teams who would each introduce their particular team's fight song. For the Packers, the introduction went thus: "This is Bart Starr of the Green Bay Packers. Go! You Packers Go!" Said NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle at the time, "Club fight songs form a rich part of (NFL) tradition, which is why the NFL's millions of fans throughout the nation should find this album a noteworthy adjunct to their football enjoyment."

Certainly, times have changed. Visit any NFL stadium today and you'll be hard-pressed to hear a true team fight song. You'll get a flood of contemporary, upbeat songs blaring over the most sophisticated of sound systems. It's catchy and effective but the notion of the fight song is a relic of the past. That's a pity, some would argue. Those fight songs were a strong part of each team's identity. They had their name. They had their players. They had their jersey colors...and they had their fight songs.

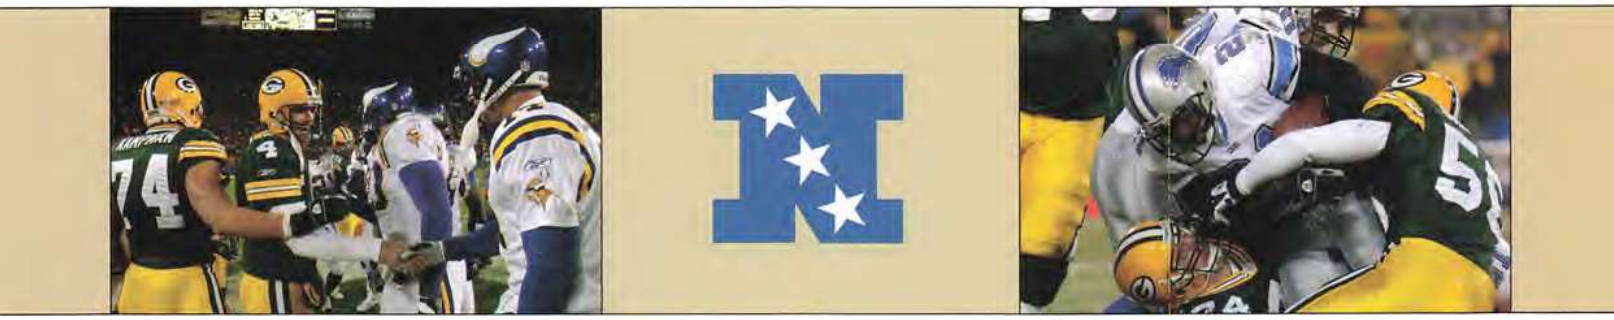
In Green Bay, the traditional fight song lives on – yet another sign of the Packers' unique heritage. "From the Karll family perspective, this song is just a great source of pride," said Karll, even though his great uncle was the last musician in the family tree. "It's a rousing song and when people hear it, if they're involved with the Packers, they know what it is. Our family has been involved with various Packer fan clubs here in Madison. I've been involved with the Madison Packer Backers and my father, John, actually originated the Iowa Packer Backers in 1968. People that know our family still talk about how it's a really neat song and that it definitely ties with the Packers. We're now four generations from the time it was written and I think our relationship, appreciation and backing of the Packers is just as strong as it was 75 years ago. It's just something that goes with the history of the Packers – the frozen tundra, the championships, Lambeau Field and Lombardi. It's another piece that ties into the whole puzzle. The fact that it's been around this long is a pretty neat thing."

To this day, Ives says he still gets requests for copies of the sheet music and often fields questions about Karll's catchy tune. "The people really love the Packer song and, once in a while, you'll even find someone who knows the words to it. I just hope they keep it alive."

REVAMPED NFC NORTH DIVISION- NFL'S 'MOST INTRIGUING'

THREE TEAMS—PACKERS, VIKINGS, LIONS—HAVE NEW COACHES

▸ BY LEE REMMEL



Changes, based on the frequent and substantial movement of both coaches and personnel, definitely have been afoot in the NFC North Division during a busy offseason.

And, as might be expected, they promise to make things more than somewhat interesting as the 2006 campaign unfolds.

This, to be sure, is the considered opinion of Reggie McKenzie, the Packers' veteran director of pro personnel, whose responsibility it is to monitor such matters for the Green and Gold.

"I think this (the NFC North) will be the most intriguing of all the of the league's eight divisions this season," he said, "because there have been so many changes.

"First off, I think we all have improved," McKenzie appended, underscoring his observation by pointing out, "Three out of the four teams in our division have new head coaches...new leadership."

The reference, of course, was to the Packers, now under the direction of 42-year-old Mike McCarthy, an energetic Pittsburgh native with definite ideas about how the game should be played in the NFL; former Eagles offensive coordinator Brad Childress, who has taken over the Vikings and quickly sent veteran quarterback Daunte Culpepper on his way; and Rod Marinelli, most recently assistant head coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, who now leads the Detroit Lions and clearly intends to be a factor in the division race.

The Lions, incidentally, were more active in the personnel market than their NFC North rivals, adding veteran quarterbacks Jon Kitna and Josh McCown and a blocking tight end—former Dallas Cowboy Jim Campbell—plus ex-Packers wide receiver Corey Bradford and linebacker Paris Lenon, who is expected to start for the Honolulu Blue and Silver.

The Vikings, meanwhile, have manifestly supplemented their cast, stealing the offseason spotlight with the signing of all-pro guard Steve Hutchinson of Seattle to a $49-million contract.

In the process, they also added running back Chester Taylor of the Baltimore Ravens and fullback Tony Richardson of the Kansas City Chiefs, linebacker Ben Leber of San Diego and safety Tank Williams of Tennessee.

Chicago's reigning NFC North Division champions were not as involved in the personnel process as their division brethren but they did acquire Carolina cornerback Ricky Manning, Jr., for their secondary and quarterback Brian Griese, formerly of Tampa Bay, for depth under center.

Meanwhile, the Packers focused on improving their defense, spearheading the effort by selecting All-America linebacker A. J. Hawk of Ohio State in the first round of the NFL Draft, a maneuver which prompted General Manager Ted Thompson to proclaim "a perfect fit."

They also lured Raiders cornerback and ex-Heisman Trophy winner Charles Woodson from Oakland to Green Bay with a $52-million contract and defensive tackle Ryan Pickett from St. Louis and five-year safety Marquand Manuel from the Seahawks in free agency.

1966: CURTAIN CALL FOR 'THUNDER AND LIGHTNING'

BY TOM ANDREWS, Packer Report

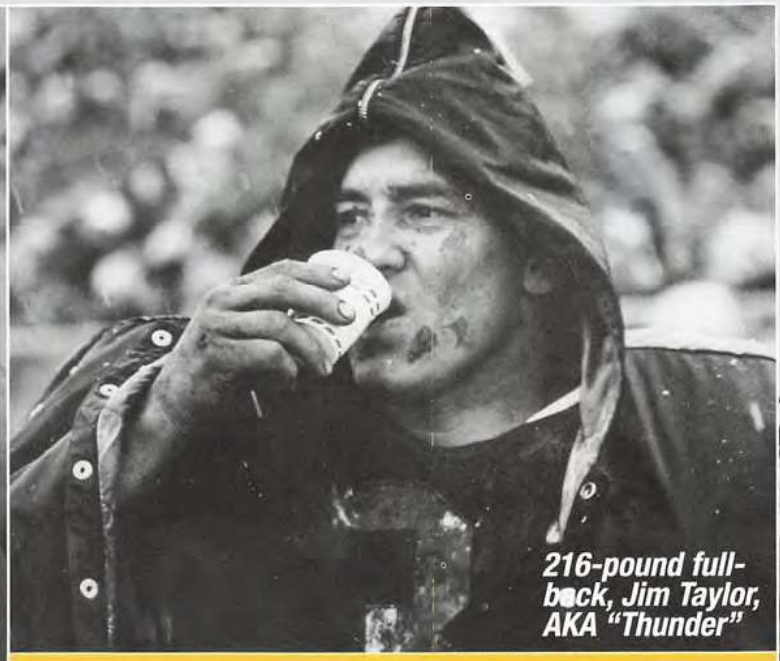
1956 Heisman Trophy winner, Paul Hornung, AKA "Lightning"



216-pound fullback, Jim Taylor, AKA "Thunder"

"Those two guys as a tandem were two of the greatest ever. They did things that were just unbelievable."

— Dave Robinson, All-Pro Packer Linebacker

Some things just go together, naturally. Potatoes and gravy. A cold beer on a hot summer's afternoon. For the Green Bay Packers of the 1960s it was "Thunder and Lightning," a dynamic running back duo who supremely complemented each other's abilities and fit Vince Lombardi's coaching philosophy like a glove.

First, there was "Thunder." Tough-as-nails fullback Jim Taylor, the 6-foot, 216-pound Bayou Blaster out of LSU who terrorized defenses by running over, around and through would-be tacklers. Delivering a bone-crushing block was another of his specialties – he simply loved to hit people. Taylor became the first runner in NFL history to rush for 1,000 yards in five straight seasons (1960-64) and was named the NFL's Most Valuable Player in 1962. No. 31 considered it a personal insult to be brought down and would often immediately jump up, clap his hands and torment opponents with, "Is that all you've got? That's the best you can hit?"

Then there was "Lightning." Hollywood handsome halfback Paul Hornung, the curly blonde-haired Golden Boy out of Notre Dame, whose exploits both on and off the field are the stuff of legend. After winning the Heisman Trophy in 1956, the 6-foot-2, 220-pound Hornung came to the Packers as a bonus pick the following year. Under Lombardi, Hornung blossomed into the ultimate clutch player, scoring 760 points over nine seasons and displaying amazing versatility. A slashing, powerful runner and punishing lead blocker for Taylor, Hornung was also an adept passer, a sure-handed receiver and a dependable kicker. Hornung had a "nose" for the goal line and was at his absolute best inside the 20-yard line. He led the NFL in scoring in 1959, 1960 and 1961, amassing 176 points in that '60 season and establishing a league record that stands to this very day. Twice he was named the league's Player of the Year.

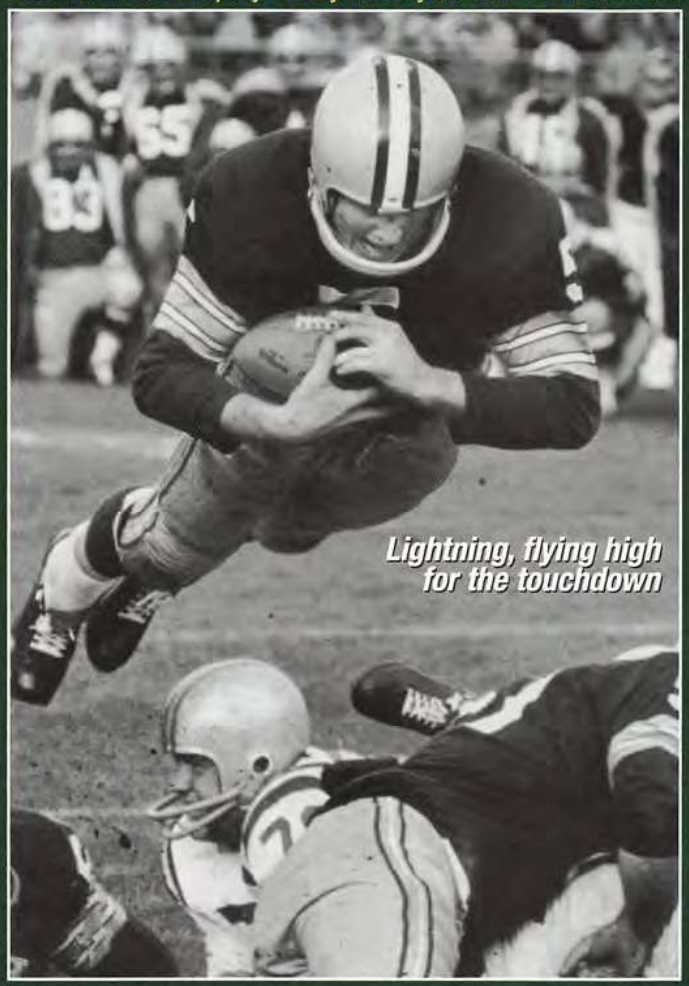
The bigger the game, the better these two guys played. In the 1961 NFL Championship game, Hornung, on leave from the U.S. Army, shocked the New York Giants by scoring a league title game record 19 points to lead the Packers to a 37-0 victory. In the championship rematch a year later in windy, bitterly cold Yankee Stadium, the Giants did everything they could to stop Taylor. They gang-tackled him. They hit him late. They stuck their hands inside his helmet, trying to gouge his eyes. They rode him out of bounds and split his tongue, forcing him to swallow blood for much of the game. But the belligerent Taylor refused to yield. A human battering ram, he carried the ball 31 times and scored the Packers' only touchdown in a 16-7 triumph.

Together, Hornung and Taylor joined quarterback Bart Starr to form a Hall of Fame backfield the likes of which may never be seen again. "They were clutch performers, totally dedicated to the team and very unselfish," said Starr, the Packers' great quarterback. "Both of them were very, very talented and their commitment was on display every time you handed them the ball or threw them a pass or they were blocking for each other. It was thrilling just to be in the backfield with them to see these kinds of things happening."



Lightning, flying high for the touchdown

"Personality-wise, they were at each end of the spectrum."
— Bart Starr, Hall of Fame Packer Quarterback

As good as Taylor and Hornung were individually, they were even better as a duo, a notion that still makes Hornung beam with pride when he talks about it. "It was great for me and, I think, great for Jimmy," Hornung said. "We played very well together and really complemented each other. I always told him he was the toughest sonofabitch, 210-pound guy that ever played. I used to always kid him, 'Look, Jimmy, you run it down to the 1-yard line but don't go over. You stop there and I'll take it the rest of the way.' I don't think there was a better twosome. We both could block but I did more blocking for him because I'd run the ball about 12 times a game. Jimmy would run the ball 25 times and Bart Starr would throw it about 30 times. That was our offense and the other teams couldn't key on anybody. You couldn't go in with a defense that you thought would stop Taylor alone or I would kill you and vice versa. So we had a pretty good three-pronged attack with Bart, Jimmy, and I."

"He was a very talented and very versatile player in the National Football League after leaving Notre Dame as a passer, a kicker, a runner, a receiver and in providing the outstanding blocking that he provided for me," Said Taylor of Hornung: "Many, many of my plays where I picked up good yardage got started with his great blocks. Everybody was making contributions with the ability they had. Coach Lombardi maximized everybody's ability to put everything into motion with the 11 players on that offensive unit."

Truly, their last hurrah together came in the 1965 NFL Championship game against Jimmy Brown and the Cleveland Browns. "Jim Brown always got all the hype," recalled Packer linebacker great Dave Robinson. "He was one of the greatest runners of all-time but Jim Taylor got 96 yards and Paul Hornung got 105 in all the mud and muck while Brown got just 50 yards. The real difference in that game was that Hornung and Taylor ran against the Browns' defense and Jim Brown had to run against Green Bay's defense. In fact, in the years that I played, Brown never had a big game against the Packers. Vince Lombardi once told me that Jim Brown never out-gained Jim Taylor head-to-head."

1966 will forever be remembered as the end of the line for Hornung and Taylor. The year Thunder and Lightning slowly faded away. Indeed, Hornung's season was cut short by injury during a November duel with the Bears in Chicago. As he fell over the goal line, the pain in Hornung's shoulder told him something was terribly wrong. It was the last touchdown he would ever score for Green Bay. Though he took on increased importance as a receiver out of the backfield, Taylor finished the season with just 705 rushing yards, his lowest output during Green Bay's reign of glory.

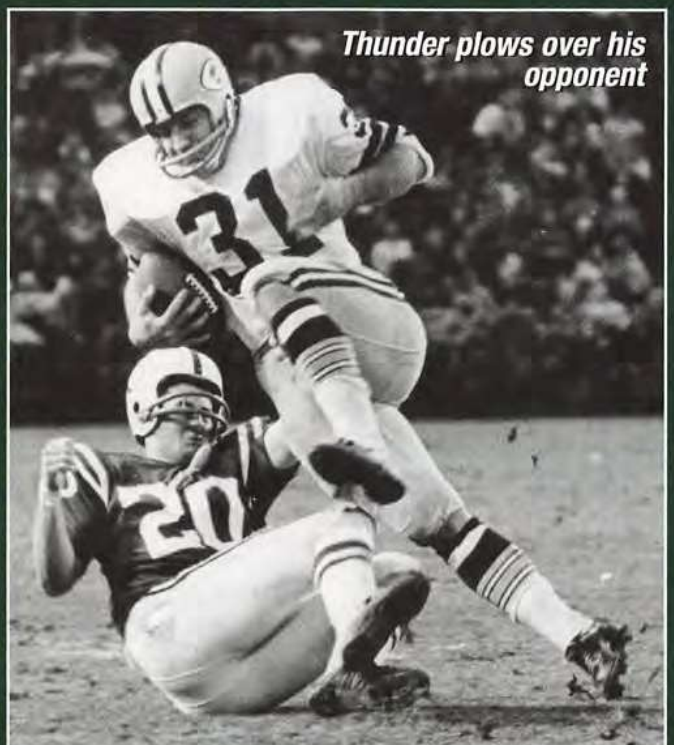
"We had a great football team in 1966 and, as far as I was concerned, Jimmy Taylor and I were kind of at the end of our run," said Hornung. "I had hurt my shoulder after banging it up four or five times over a period of years. But the last one was a bad one in Chicago. You know, Lombardi was always so demanding that all of us played hurt and he did get away with murder. I've told many people that guys had horrible turf toe, sprained ankles and what have you. In today's world they'd be off for two or three weeks. And here I was playing and I played a couple games with my neck where I was in a situation where I had a serious problem with the cervical spine. If I would have been hit in a certain way I would have been a paraplegic."



Thunder plows over his opponent

Lombardi knew the handwriting was on the wall and that Hornung and Taylor wouldn't be around forever. So he drafted their potential replacements, the Gold Dust Twins, running back Donny Anderson out of Texas Tech and bruising fullback Jim Grabowski from Illinois. It was an uneasy time of transition in Green Bay. "I spent a lot of time with Jerry Kramer, Forrest Gregg, Fuzzy Thurston, Bob Skoronski and people like that and I get the sense that this was a labor of love," said Hall of Fame Packer defensive end Willie Davis. "These guys (Hornung and Taylor) could run that sweep and they could do things that were uniquely good. I had great concern about where we would be the next year after Hornung and Taylor were out of there. Of course, we had the two 'Gold Dust Twins' in Jim Grabowski and Donny Anderson. It probably wasn't the same. With Taylor, you knew what you were going to get. With Hornung, you also knew what you were going to get. There was a sense of uncertainty with the new guys and we had to play the whole next season before we reached a certain comfort level with the new guys."

After playing in the 1966 NFL title game and in Super Bowl I, Taylor officially ended his stay in Green Bay. Much to Lombardi's angst, he had played out his contract option and went back home to New Orleans to play his final season with the expansion Saints. To this day, Taylor is comfortable with his decision. "I look at it like I made the right choice and I did what was best for me," said Taylor. "It was time for me to move on. I certainly enjoyed all of the wonderful, great and successful years I had with the Packers and all of the championship teams that I played on. I'm happy with the part I played with the Green Bay Packers for the nine seasons I was there. But I would do everything the same way and join the expansion New Orleans Saints in my final year in the National Football League. It was great to come back home and to be received here, to sell tickets and to be a role model to help lead the Saints in their first year."

Ironically, the Saints almost had Thunder and Lightning in their first year. Lombardi, not believing New Orleans would be interested in Hornung, put his name on the NFL expansion draft list. The Saints jumped at the chance to take the Golden Boy and market the two future Hall of Famers in 1967. However, doctors advised Hornung that he would be taking an enormous health risk so he retired and launched his broadcasting career.

Taylor and Hornung were gone but were certainly never forgotten. The Golden Boy's clutch play on the field was matched only by his legendary curfew violations with his roommate, wide receiver Max McGee. And Taylor? Packer fans will always have the enduring images of him running as if the next yard would be his last. "Oh, Jimmy Taylor was a fierce, fierce competitor," laughed center Bill Curry. "If you tackled him, it was an insult. So, if Jim punched the tackler, bit him, or pushed his face in the mud, fine!"

Salt and pepper. Hornung and Taylor. Together, they spiced up the Packer attack and brought a one-two punch much that made defenders cringe. They left a legacy that ranks with the very best who ever played on the hallowed ground known as Lambeau Field.

PATIENTLY PERSISTENT

RODGERS' GAME AND ATTITUDE GROWS

BY PETER JACKEL, Racine Journal Times

He appears inconspicuously in the Green Bay Packers' dressing room, devoid of the riveting charisma exuded by a graying gunslinger from Mississippi who wears No. 4.

Aaron Rodgers, the kid entrusted - or should we say burdened? - with the overwhelming responsibility of eventually replacing Brett Favre as the Green Bay Packers' quarterback, still knows his place as an untested leader. With no body of work yet to speak of as a legitimate NFL quarterback, Rodgers is fully cognizant that he is best seen, preferably with a playbook, and not heard among the men he will eventually try to lead.

Meanwhile, this 22-year-old kid continues to wait out the fading Favre Era, quietly respecting it and doing absolutely nothing to disrupt it. He'll get his chance when he gets his chance - after all, Gods are not to be rushed - and when he does, well, just watch out for Aaron Charles Rodgers.

Going into his second season with the Packers, Rodgers' passer rating is 39.8, based mostly on a lousy performance during that disastrous 48-3 loss to the Baltimore Ravens last December 19. But if you look at Rodgers as the long-term answer with ominous shades of skepticism, which is justifiable given the paucity of franchise quarterbacks who have triumphantly arrived and blissfully departed from Austin-Straubel Airport during the last half century, the important thing is Rodgers believes in himself.

And he's more than willing to earn your respect not necessarily as Favre's eventual replacement, but as Favre's eventual successor.

"I've always been kind of the underdog story in that I didn't get recruited out of high school and stuff," Rodgers said. "I've always been doubted. Not that I get an amazing amount of joy proving people wrong, but it's fun when people say you can't do something and you end up being able to do it."

Whether that comes when the indestructible

Favre finally can't get up after going down or when Favre formally passes his torch to Rodgers remains to be seen. But when Rodgers finally fastens his chin strap and places the Packers squarely on his shoulders, a safe bet is that his knees won't buckle.

Take a few minutes with Rodgers and one can't help but believe that he is a man far more of substance than style. In the realm of personality dynamics, he's a better fit for Bart Starr's unshakeable quiet leadership than Favre's free-wheeling country boy charisma, but what's wrong with that?

One litmus test to the mental disposition Rodgers has came when he was asked a series of questions for this story. The questions, all completely germane to Rodgers' situation as the Packers' quarterback of the future, nevertheless could easily be construed as provacative.

And Rodgers handled each of them with poised rational answers one just wouldn't expect to hear from too many 22-year-old kids. There was no grousing as he was asked pointed questions. No defiant silence. No sharpness in his replies.

Just poise. The kind of unflappable poise that will allow him to one day step into Favre's size-infinity cleats and stare across the line of scrimmage into Brian Urlacher's flaring eyes with self-assurance, not fear.

So what about those questions? Tell us, Aaron, how did you emotionally handle the four months Favre spent making a decision about his future?

How difficult was it wondering whether you would be thrust into a pressure cooker if Favre retired or relegated to holding a clipboard for another season if he didn't?

"My attitude over the last year has morphed into an attitude of only worrying about things I can control and just realizing that there are so many things I can't control in this business," Rodgers said. "And one of those was his decision.

"And so I really didn't worry about it too much. I just prepared as if I was going to get an opportunity to be the guy and try to lead the guys who stuck around as well as I could and just work on things every day to try to get better.

"All the while, I was figuring he was going to come back in my own mind because I tried to put myself in his shoes and I thought he was going to come back for sure. So I kind of prepared myself for that.

"I can't say I didn't pay attention to it at all because, although I don't read the papers or anything, my friends do. So they were always keeping me up-to-date on what was going on, although there really wasn't much to report until he made a decision."

Score one point for Rodgers.

OK, Aaron, here's a potentially loaded question: How did you feel about Favre's quote about how the younger quarterbacks should learn on their own because he wasn't going to go out of his way to be a mentor?

"I think that quote was kind of taken out of context," Rodgers said.

"He's been real helpful if I've ever had a question or anything. Brett's the kind of guy where you have to go up to him and approach him and I'm totally fine with that.

"I think what he was trying to say in that quote was that we've got a quarterbacks coach in Green Bay (Tom Clements) who can coach me. But at the same time, if I've got any questions, he would be more than happy to answer them. And he definitely has. He's been very accomodating and I've think I've learned a ton just by watching him. At the same time, if I have any questions, he's been eager to help me out."

Score another point for Rodgers.

So far, so good, Aaron. But what about this question?: How did you feel about Packers general manager Ted Thompson insisting before the NFL draft that he wouldn't hesitate to select a quarterback if the right name was on the board? Surely that upset you, didn't it?

"Not at all," he said. "Again, that decision was definitely way out of my hands. They might have been thinking about a quarterback, but they didn't take one. They had faith in me as far as being the guy down the road and I'm not even worried about any of that."

Chalk up yet another point for Rodgers.

OK, how about this one? Quarterbacks who have played under University of California coach Jeff Tedford have historically had a difficult transition into the NFL. While Rodgers has yet to establish himself, quarterbacks coached by Tedford who played in the NFL include Trent Dilfer, Akili Smith, Joey Harrington, David Carr and Kyle Boller.

How do you feel about being saddled with that tag, Aaron?

"I did get irritated because they were kind of attacking Coach Tedford, whom I have the utmost respect for and who's got an unprecedented record as far as first-round quarterbacks," Rodgers said. "It's not his fault that some of the guys haven't had the success. He's prepared them as best he could. He's one of my mentors and I looked up at him a lot, so that bothered me. But at the same time, my expectations for myself are higher than anyone else puts on me.

"I'm very self-motivated and I want to be the best. And there's going to be people who doubt me along the way, but I'm not too worried about them."

Count new Packers coach Mike McCarthy as someone who has been won over by Rodgers.

"Obviously the hours he's logged in the offseason are tremendous," McCarthy said. "You see a comfortable quarterback. You don't see a guy that's searching, going through his reads. He's putting the ball in the right place and he's throwing the ball in rhythm, too."

Does that mean Rodgers will eventually become the second coming of Favre? It would be outrageously unfair to even make such a suggestion.

At the same time, if Aaron Rodgers simply concentrates on being Aaron Rodgers, the Packers just might be set at quarterback for several more years to come. Following Favre might be likened to following Barry Bonds or Michael Jordan, but believe Rodgers when he insists he will be ready when that time comes.

"I know I'm going to be following a legend and I know there are high expectations in Green Bay," he said. "But the expectations I have for myself far outweigh any expectations the Packers fans could put on me."

BADGERS ON ICE

INDEED A GREAT DAY FOR HOCKEY

BY JASON LAUREN, Green Bay Press-Gazette

This Lambeau Leap was unique.

It didn't come after a Green Bay Packers touchdown. It didn't occur during the NFL season. And it wasn't performed by anyone wearing cleats. This Lambeau Leap came by players wearing hockey skates, yes hockey skates.

The University of Wisconsin men's hockey team had just beaten Ohio State University 4-2 in the Lambeau Field Frozen Tundra Classic on Feb. 11 in the first hockey game at the historic stadium.

The Badgers, with their skates still on, sprinted from the hockey rink to the north end of the field and leaped into the stands, just like the Packers do during their home games. The Wisconsin players celebrated their win in front of 40,890, the third-largest crowd to see a hockey game in North American history. UW defenseman Jeff Likens directed his teammates to the stands.

"(Likens) was like, 'We're going. Let's go. Who's coming?'" UW senior Adam Burish said after the game. "We were perfect. You know how John Madden diagrams it where your hips have got to be above the green? I think the guys got their hips above the green... and we were perfect. It was unbelievable.

"It was a special, special moment."

That moment is just one example of why this game was special. Only the Michigan State-Michigan game (74,544 attendance) in 2001 at Spartan Stadium in East Lansing, Mich.,and the Edmonton Oilers-Montreal Canadiens game (57,167) in 2003 at Commonwealth Stadium in Edmonton have drawn bigger hockey crowds in North American history than the Frozen Tundra Classic.

The game was broadcast live on Fox Sports Net North and was designated as the U.S. Hockey Hall of Fame Game.

"It will be something that our kids will talk about their whole lives, even the coaches," said UW coach Mike Eaves, whose team went on to win the NCAA Division I national championship at the Bradley Center in Milwaukee in April. "It was more than just a game. It was an event. It's one of those stories that you pass on to your kids' kids and their kids. It will get better every time you tell it."

Just like a Packers game, thousands of tailgating fans packed the Lambeau Field parking lot before the game. Just like a late-season Packers game, fans bundled up in winter clothing. Just like a Packers game, the crowd was loud and boisterous. And just like a Packers game, it was played on the hallowed grounds of Lambeau Field.

"We were playing on some pretty special grounds there," Ohio State coach John Markell said. "Being a big football school, the magnitude of that game to play on Lambeau Field... was amazing.

"As we were walking out onto the ice, people were standing on the ground and were basically saying to themselves, 'I can't believe I'm standing on Lambeau Field.' They've probably never had an opportunity to do that before.

"That meant something to them, and it was pretty special."

The game was a throwback to hockey's beginnings. Hockey was first played outdoors, but today it's played in indoor arenas in perfect conditions.

Playing outdoors presented many challenges.

A hockey rink was assembled on the north end of the field and a section of bleachers was placed on the opposite end of the rink. The process - which required about 17,000 gallons of water to create the ice sheet and a 300-ton refrigeration system to keep it frozen - took about 10 days to complete.

"It takes you back to the roots of the game," Eaves said. "The sound of the puck on your stick and the sound of the game being outside has a whole distinct noise and feel. It takes you back to another time you played. It's almost like going back into a time machine."

The game had near perfect weather. The temperature at the start of the game was 28 with a 7 mph wind and partly sunny skies. By the start of the third period, it was 27 and calm.

"It was a phenomenal night for a hockey game for February in Green Bay," Eaves said.

The ice was chippy at times and created some odd bounces of the puck. The sun's glare on the ice also presented challenges in the first period. The players weren't complaining, however.

"You don't go into the game expecting great, great ice," Burish said after the game. "I mean, it's outdoors, so you don't know what to expect. As the game went on, it got chippy... The pucks were bouncing everywhere, so it was tough. But again, it's outdoors.

"You could throw cement down and the guys would have a thrill playing at Lambeau Field... But who cares? It was such a blast out there." It was a blast for more than just the players, coaches and fans that attended the game. The game was the highlight of a weekend of activities that included a community skate the days before and after the game, a showing of the NHL's Stanley Cup with the Packers' three Super Bowl trophies and a series of scrimmages between area youth hockey teams the morning of the game.

The community skate gave the public a chance to skate on the ice during one-hour sessions. The public obtained free passes for the community skate through registration at area businesses and on the Packers' Web site. The public responded with about 3,500 requests, including online requests from 18 different states.

The Packers came up with the idea to host the game. John Jones, the Packers' executive vice president and chief operating officer, contacted Wisconsin and the school immediately showed interest.

"We needed something that would create a stadium-sized event," Jones said. "We'd primarily been indoors (for events) during the winter, and we needed something big like Badger hockey... We also looked at it as an opportunity to create profitability in the first quarter of the new year, which is real important to us. Also, it enabled us to get new fans that were real avid hockey fans to cross over and come to Lambeau Field who might have never been here for a football game before and sort of rediscover everything we've done at Lambeau."

Nick Collins:

THE NEW NO. 36 STARTS HIS OWN LEGACY

BY JASON WILDE, Wisconsin State Journal

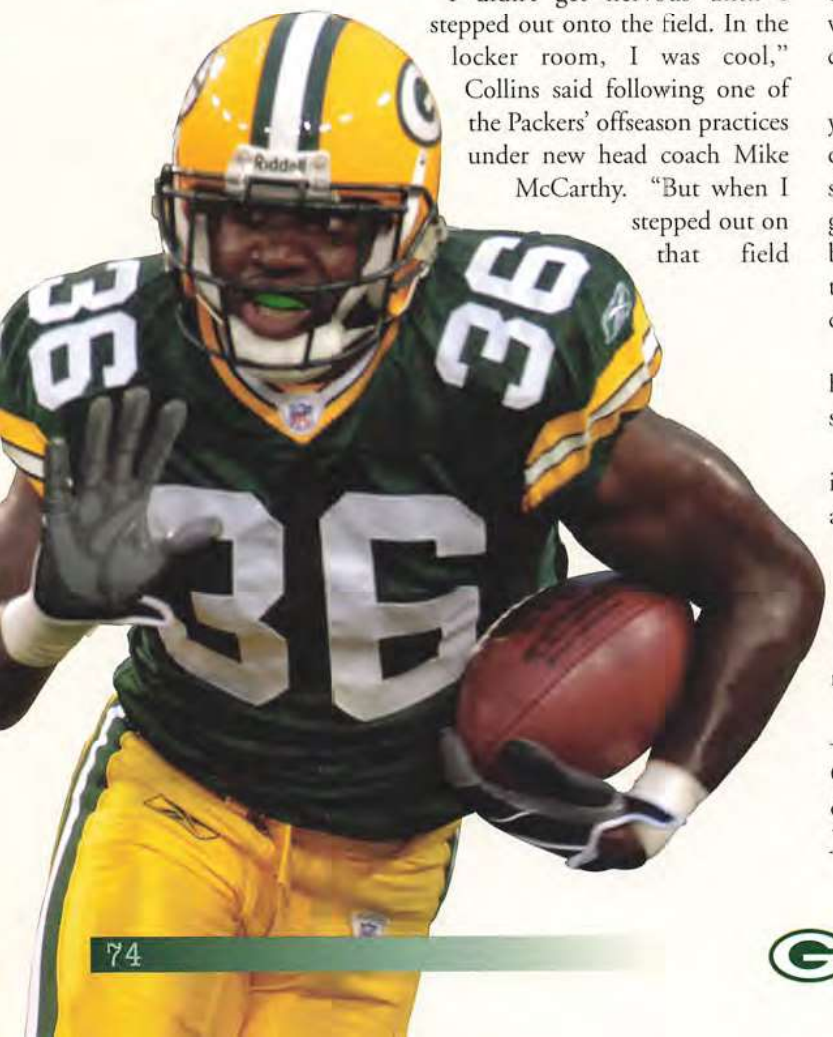
Kickoff was still a few hours away, and as Nick Collins sat in a narrow row of lockers inside the visitors' dressing room of Ford Field, he was perfectly calm.

Sure, the Green Bay Packers rookie safety was about to start his first regular-season NFL game. But what was there to be nervous about, really?

He'd played before big crowds before, even at Bethune-Cookman — Remember that Florida Classic game, he thought to himself, with 70,000 fans? — and he'd worked with the No. 1 defense since Aug. 7. Plus, he'd started all four of the Packers' preseason games, so what was the big deal?

But as the time came to walk out onto the field, well, everything changed. So when he emerged from the tunnel and heard the crowd — such as it was, the Detroit Lions' faithful being a late-arriving bunch — the butterflies started dancing inside Collins' stomach.



"I didn't get nervous until I stepped out onto the field. In the locker room, I was cool," Collins said following one of the Packers' offseason practices under new head coach Mike McCarthy. "But when I stepped out on that field (for pregame warmups), I was like, 'Wow, I'm here.'"

Yes, he was. And he was there all season long, too — one of the few bright spots in an otherwise thoroughly disappointing 4-12 season.

"You can't be anybody else. You just have to be yourself."

-Nick Collins

Starting all 16 regular-season games at free safety for the NFL's No. 1-ranked pass defense, the second-round draft pick was named to Pro Football Weekly's all-rookie team, finishing the 2005 season with 96 tackles, one inteception, nine passes defended and one forced fumble. He also made most of the secondary calls for the defense, recovered a pair of onside kick attempts late in the Packers' victories over Atlanta and Seattle and chipped in 10 tackles on special teams to boot.

"You know, he got better and better as the year went on last year. And he's picked up right where he's left off," said new Packers defensive coordinator Bob Sanders, who served as the team's defensive ends coach last season. "We're anticipating him to continue to grow and get more and more confident in the scheme. From the beginning of the year to the end of the year, just as a player, his tackling, everything, just got better and better. Hopefully he'll just crank up right where he left off."

Those are the expectations of Collins throughout the Packers' hierarchy, with McCarthy doing nothing to lessen them during offseason workouts.

After the team's organized team activity practices wrapped up in late June, McCarthy stood on the Clarke Hinkle Field sideline and recalled coming to Green Bay in January and breaking down tape of his new team's games from the year before.

"And Nick Collins, to me, he jumped right off the film," McCarthy said. "You could just see why everybody was excited about him last year. Having the chance to see him in person, he is ready to take off."

Of course, before he could take off, Collins had to learn to fly — which he did in the Packers' seventh game of last season, at Cincinnati on Oct. 30. In that game, Collins recorded six tackles, defended three passes, wallopped Bengals star receiver Chad Johnson to knock a ball loose and narrowly missed an interception.

Even more important, he made a vital discovery: The

"You could just see why everybody was excited about him last year. Having the chance to see him in person, he is ready to take off."

-Mike McCarthy

Collins did not disappoint last year as a rookie.

butterflies were finally gone.

"You want to go out there and do everything right, especially as a rookie. So I was real nervous," Collins admitted. "The coaches were like, 'Oh yeah, he's ready.' But I didn't know. But once I settled down, started getting the concepts of the defense down, it worked.

"Cincinnati, that was the game. It was totally different. I was out there, calm. I was ready. I'd done it over and over again, and now it was like I'd been in the 'D' for three years. There was just this new (feeling) 'OK, this is how it's supposed to feel. Just come out here and play, do your job.'"

The next step in doing his job, Collins readily admits, is making more plays. No sacks, only one interception and nine pass breakups isn't enough for a guy with goals as bold as he has. It should help to have two top-flight cornerbacks — veteran Al Harris and free-agent pick-up Charles Woodson — working with him in the secondary, freeing him up to blitz more often and freelance a little more on passing downs.

"I have to go out there and give myself the opportunity to make plays — be in position to make plays," said Collins, who was the first rookie to start at free safety for the Packers since Chuck Cecil did so in 1988. "We have two shutdown corners now, and that gives you the opportunity to make more plays as a safety. It's just amazing. We've got Charles Woodson on one side, Al Harris on the other side. You don't have to worry about anything. You just do your job."

One other thing Collins won't worry about is the jersey number he wears. Much was made of general manager Ted Thompson's decision to issue Collins No. 36 — which hadn't been worn by a Packer since five-time All-Pro safety LeRoy Butler retired following the 2001 season.

While no one is ready to say that Collins is Butler's caliber just yet, he clearly has the mindset to deliver on that promise.

"I knew he was a great player, but it was the same thing all the time: 'You know you have LeRoy's number, you've got to live up to that number,'" Collins said. "But I'm just going to be me. That's all I can be. You can't be anybody else. You just have to be yourself. You try to be someone else, you're going to constantly mess up or something's going to go wrong. So I just go out there and be myself. I want to be on his level, but I want to go beyond that, too. So that's how I go out there and play.

"Each year, I want to get better," Collins said. "That's what I want to do."

PACKERS HUMBLE LIONS FOR FIRS

'ONE SIDE, BOY!'

Schneidman Speaking to Ebding
As Jankowski Rushes Up With Mail

MILWAUKEE SENTINEL

SPORTS

MILWAUKEE, MONDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1937

Herm Schneidman #4

Quincy, Ill. – At age 93, Herm Schneidman is the oldest living former Green Bay Packer.

His hearing and eyesight are fading, but his memory is exceptionally keen, and he still vividly recalls the first contract he signed for Packers' head coach Earl "Curly" Lambeau more than 70 years ago.

"He mailed me a contract in 1935 for $80 a game, which was about the bare minimum," Schneidman said. "I was a blocking back, I wasn't a star like Blood or Hutson. When I played for the Chicago Cardinals (in 1940) I got $135 a game, win or lose, and whether I played or not."

The former University of Iowa star was the second player, and one of five Packers in the team's 86-year history, to wear jersey No. 4. The player who currently dons that jersey, quarterback Brett Favre, earns about $10 million a year, or approximately $625,000 per game.

Schneidman wore jersey No. 4 and was a quarterback—mainly a blocking back in that era—and versatile defensive player on some of the greatest teams in Packer history. He played from 1935-39 under Lambeau, was in the same backfield with NFL Hall of Famers Johnny "Blood" McNally, Clarke Hinkle, and Arnie Herber, and played defense and special teams along side legendary Packer receiver Don Hutson.

Packer team historian Lee Remmel said: "He played on two NFL championship teams and on the 1938 team that lost in the NFL Championship to the New York Giants—with some of the greatest names in NFL history. That's a pretty strong testimonial."

Schneidman, born November 22, 1912, in Rock Island, Ill., was raised in Quincy, a quaint city of 40,000 along the Mississippi River in western Illinois. A former three-sport prep star, he attended the University of Iowa and wanted to pursue basketball, but switched to football and became a star halfback his senior year.

Schneidman was a starter on the Packers 1936 championship squad that defeated the Boston Redskins 21-6 in New York and the 1938 team that lost in the NFL title game to the New York Giants by a 23-17 score. He played in the exhibition games and one regular season contest of the Packers'1939 world championship season before retiring.

Four years of blocking and filling in on defense at defensive back, linebacker, and end took its toll physically on the 5-foot-10-inch, 200-pound Schneidman.

In William Henderson-like fashion, he never carried the ball more than five times in a season, and didn't have a rushing attempt in the 1936 season or his brief 1939 campaign. For his career, he gained 37 yards on 13 attempts and caught seven passes for 119 yards and two touchdowns.

"Early in 1939, I got the crap beat out of me and couldn't move my arm and could hardly walk," he said, noting he re-injured his right shoulder that he first dislocated throwing the discus for the Iowa track team. "I walked into Curly's office and told him I was going to retire. He wasn't too mad, because we had a couple of younger players who could step in and we had a very strong team."

The 1939 Packers, regarded as one of the best teams in NFL history, cruised to the franchise's fifth world championship to complete a 9-2 season.

At age 25, Schneidman's Packer career was over. He and his wife, Venita, moved back to Illinois and established a beer distributorship and Schneidman became a very successful and civic-minded businessman in Quincy.

The Chicago Cardinals coaxed him out of retirement and into playing for the 1940 season. Schneidman then served in the U.S. Navy from 1942-46 and played on the Navy's Great Lakes football team for two years before hanging up his cleats for good.

Schneidman said the Bears were the Packers' heated rival and that Lambeau put extra emphasis on winning that game. "Curly didn't like to lose to anyone, but especially the Bears," he said. "If we lost to Chicago, we didn't get to eat (a post-game meal)."

Hutson and Schneidman both joined the Packers in 1935 and were teammates on offense, at times in the defensive backfield, and on the kick-off coverage unit.

"Don Hutson was the greatest player," Schneidman stated matter-of-factly. "He could outrun anybody. He always had big pass plays against Chicago. Johnny Blood was great, but he was always into something. He liked to change the plays in the huddle, even though Curly had a standing order. Blood was always Blood."

The humble and unassuming Schneidman was proud to be a Green Bay Packer. "I was happy to be a Packer and I'm proud of the players I played with," he said. "I didn't realize how good we were until years later. I was just a player who worked hard and tried to do my job on every play. I didn't do anything special."

Herm Schneidman just blocked and paved the way for an NFL Hall of Fame backfield on two world championship teams that amassed a 42-14-1 record from 1935-39. Today, Schneidman enjoys watching the Packers on television and a future Hall of Famer who currently wears the No. 4 jersey.

"I had (number) four for the first couple years in Green Bay before the league changed the numbering system for backs and ends," said Schneidman, who then wore jersey No. 51. "I think Brett Favre is a great player and athlete. I like to watch him play—he could have played with us in the old days."

When the temperature drops, we rise to the top.

It's cold. It's snowing. It's miserable. It's perfect weather for some Packers football. We've got a sure way to get to the stadium. The 2007 Mercury Mariner with Intelligent Four-Wheel Drive or the 2007 Mercury Milan with all-wheel drive.* Now, you're ready to take your game on the road.

*Available October 2006.

THE WORLD LEADER

2006 Green Bay Packers Season

BEGINS AND ENDS WITH EPIC RIVALRY

BY LEE REMMEL

Time was when the Green Bay Packers and the Chicago Bears were a customary pairing on the National Football League's opening day schedule – donnybrooks that almost invariably occurred on Green Bay turf.

For prime example, they collided in their mutual league inaugural eight times over an 11-year span – from 1942 to 1952. All of those contests being staged in the Packers' then cozy City Stadium (24,800) on the banks of the East River.

But this practice has changed over the years as the league has grown and gone "national." It thus may have come as a something of a surprise when the immemorial antagonists (they have clashed 170 times since 1921, more often than any other two teams in NFL history) were designated to collide in their joint season opener Sept. 10 in Lambeau Field.

It has been eight years, after all, since the Packers and their Windy City brethren have mutually kicked off an NFL season, the most recent such collision having occurred in 1997, when the Packers outdueled the Bears on Sept. 1 in what remains the earliest ever regular-season meeting between the neighborhood rivals.

And, before that, there was a nine-year hiatus between opening day meetings for them (from 1970 through 1978).

What sets their '06 schedule totally apart from any past agenda, however, is the fact that, this year, the Packers and Bears will both open and close the season against each other for the first time in their 85-year rivalry.

This year's rematch will find them squaring off—for the 172nd time—at 12 noon on New Year's Eve afternoon in Soldier Field.

Opening day, the Bears invade Lambeau Field for the 171st regular-season encounter between the NFL's most venerable enemies. It will be a 3:15 "late show" kickoff.

The Packers' commitments also will include a pair of Monday night games on the road — a 7:30 p.m. (Green Bay time) visit to Philadelphia Oct. 2 and a 5:30 p.m. (PST) showing at Seattle against Mike Holmgren's reigning American Football Conference champions Nov. 27.

There also is one other departure from the "12 noon" format. It will find the Packers making a rare Thursday night appearance, hosting Minnesota for a contest Dec. 21.

From a competitive standpoint, the schedule presents the Packers with a substantial season-ending challenge.

They will close out the campaign with three consecutive divisional games, which obviously could have a significant impact on the Green and Gold's fortunes. They will, in order, be hosting the Detroit Lions on Sunday, Dec. 17, facing Minnesota four nights later (Dec. 21) and, of course, closing out the season against the Bears in a customarily hostile Soldier Field Dec. 31.

It will be the 10th time the Packers have finished a regular season against the Bears – the second time in the last three years.
